Our Quebec Number

IN THIS issue of Canadian Grocer, space is largely given to the special featuring of articles gathered from merchants in the Province of Quebec. Quebec occupies a foremost place in the several provinces that go to form this great Dominion. Her position industrially, to say nothing of her importance because of her seaports, is a creditable one, and its healthy financial state at the present time is something of which its people are very proud.

The grocers in this province for the most part possess vision and a keen appreciation of right ideas of merchandising. Readers will do well to read the pages of this number, and by so doing will learn something of what their fellow grocers in the French-Canadian province are doing to promote and maintain sales at the present time. Articles from many retail grocers, covering a wide variety of subjects are here contained, and are well worth the time it takes to read them.

Must Mention Names

THE BROAD assertion made by an alderman in a certain Eastern Ontario city, to the effect that grocers in that place were filling orders for the city's poor with rancid butter, rotten fish, and other goods short in weight has met with the denunciation it deserves, at the hands of the grocers' association of that town. A resolution was passed at a meeting of the retail grocers, asking that the alderman name the offending grocers, if there be such, so that the grocers and the general public may know the same. Such a sweeping statement involves the entire body of retail grocers in the city, since no one in particular is mentioned, and it is only fair that in a charge so serious, that specific instances be cited.

Grocers are well advised at all times, whether it is in the filling of city orders for poor people or in filling an order for the best customer of the store, that the goods sent out are above reproach, and will in no way reflect on the reputation of the merchant. Too much care cannot be taken in this regard, and seeing to it that all goods sold are in the very best condition possible, will mean increasing trade to such an extent that cannot be overestimated.

If grocers have taken advantage of city orders to fill them with goods that were not up to the standard, more harm will be done them, than any possible gain that they might imagine they have obtained. On the other hand if the assertion is a random one, made with little or no foundation, any stigma that has been cast on the grocers in this city in question, should at once be removed, by a direct clear-cut statement as to who the offending merchants are.

Business Failures In 1921

ACCORDING to the annual analysis of business failures in Canada by Bradstreets, the period of 1921 saw the heaviest total of large commercial failures ever reported, and in the United States "the second largest total of bank suspensions recorded since modern failure reporting was begun in the early eighties." At the same time it should be remembered that the heavy increases in values of commodities during the years of the war and post-war prosperity greatly added to the totals of failures, really out of proportion to their seriousness, relative to the grand total of those engaged in business.

For some years past the principle has been laid down that business success or failure was largely personal—in other words that the individual himself was chiefly responsible for failure to succeed. In 1918 the proportion of failures credited to causes originating within the individual himself rose to its highest point, 86 per cent., while outside influences were credited with causing 14 per cent. The 1919 returns were almost identical with this, 85.9 per cent. In 1920 the proportion due to personal causes fell to 83.1 per cent. In 1921, however, the trader who failed was comparatively speaking "a child of circumstances," only 74.8 per cent. of the 1921 failures being due to cause inherent in the individuals, while 25.2 per cent. were beyond his control. Lack of capital covered slightly over one-third of the failures in both 1920 and 1921, the percentage in each case being remarkably close, at 34 per cent.

West Shows Biggest Gain

THE CANADIAN census returns which have just been completed, give an opportunity for some interesting comparisons. Our present total population of 8,769,489 persons represents an increase of 21.5 per cent. during the past ten years, and an increase from a population of 3,689,257 fifty years ago. The increase in population in the last ten years amounts to 1,475,988, which is very small compared with the advances which the country has made in other directions. The debts which Canada carries representing development of the country, and the natural resources which exist in the Dominion make advisable the securing of more population of a selected nature to help develop our resources and carry the load of taxation.

Immigration in the past eight years has been greatly interrupted by the war. It is but a few years ago that under the stimulus of a tide of immigration the West was asking for a census every five years instead of ten.

A peculiarity of this unevenly settled country is that Nova Scotia with an area of 21,068 sq. miles, has a population equal to that of British Columbia with an area of 353,416 sq. miles. Ontario with 2,929,054 is the home of almost exactly one-third of the people of the Dominion. Ten years ago Ontario boasted 35 per cent. of the population of the Dominion, thus its proportion has decreased. Quebec's share has also declined from 28 to 27 per cent. of the total for Canada, in the ten years. All provinces except Prince Edward Island have shown steady growth. The weight of population has moved westeward, the West showing an increase from 24 per cent. of the population of Canada in 1911 to 28 per cent. in 1921.

Baes, vice-president and general manager and J. G. Love, secretary. These men are former salesmen for the Toledo Scale Co., in the Windsor office. The company plans to handle equipment for the retail store.

Features in Next Week's Issue

The part price tickets play in the sale of an article is generally given a place of importance in the mind of the average grocer. Canadian Grocer has recently sought an expression of opinion from grocers in different parts of Canada, on the value of price tickets. An article covering these opinions will appear in March 17 issue, and should be read by all grocers. Henry Johnson, Jr., whose articles are always awaited with interest, will talk about the subject of inventory, dealing in an analytical way with the statement of a grocer who seeks his advice on his submitted statement. This merchant has taken his inventory but finds that it has not panned out as he expected. Read what Henry Johnson has to say about it next week.

Imported Eggs May Come In If They Are Up To Standards

Ottawa, March 8, (Special).—Egg producers, dealers and consumers were in session here yesterday. The chief feature of the conference is a resolution that was passed, asking that the importation of foreign eggs be prohibited (unless under Canadian standards). The resolution is to the effect that all foreign eggs of not less than 43 pounds to the 30-doz. case be permitted entry into Canada on the understanding that none of them be graded for sale according to the Canadian standards of "specials" and "extras."

The resolution in question was moved by C. M. Goddard of the Ontario Producers' Association and seconded by R. S. White, President of the Canadian Produce Association. Those speaking in support of the motion included Mrs. J. A. Wilson, representing the National Council of Women; R. G. Crabtree, Ottawa Retail Grocers' Association; R. S. White, the Canadian Produce Association, and C. E. Kyle, the British Columbia Poultrymen's Exchange.

Other Resolutions

Other important resolutions passed were:

"That imported eggs be distributed in the original packages or in packages marked showing the country of origin.

"That all invoices covering the delivery of foreign eggs in shell or otherwise state clearly the country of origin." In this the retailers dissented.

"That all imported eggs other than those in the shell shall come in packages plainly and distinctly marked, showing the country of origin, and that when used in the manufacture of foods, and where such foods are sold, a conspicuous sign with two-inch letters must be placed by the seller so that the consumer may know the country of origin.

"That the Department of Agriculture arrange for the supervising of the canned eggs industry.

"That no person operating any cold-storage plant shall receive eggs for storage or shall store eggs therein without an accompanying certificate in writing from the owner of such eggs, certifying that said eggs have been candled and all bad and unsound eggs removed.

"That no person shall receive, sell or demand payment for bad eggs in excess of a margin of allowance of 1 per cent. on the total of each transaction."

Letters To The Editor

Editor, Canadian Grocer:

If of interest to you, I will give you my view on the local grocery trade in Quebec.

Les marchands-épiciers en détail viennent de traverser une des périodes les plus déprimantes de leur histoire.

On constate que plusieurs bons et anciens épiciers ont depuis quelques temps abandonné ce commerce pour cause que les bénifices se faisaient de plus en plus rares dans cette branche de l'activité commerciale. La vente de produits alimentaires de haute qualité et de luxe sur lesquels on réalisait un assez bon bénifice a tellement diminué depuis la guerre, et qu'aujourd'hui la vente se limite presqu'aux articles de première nécessité sur lesquels il n'y a pas de bénifices, même suffisant pour couvrir les frais de'exploitation qui sont très onéreux. Il y a en plus la concurrence, et les pertes inévitables à ce commerce qui exige pourtant beaucoup de travail et de soins, et donne en définitive un résultat peu encourageant.

Il est à remarquer que ce qui est arrivé a été prévu il y a déja près de trois ans, lorsque l'Association des marchands détaillants de la ville, réalisant la situation future du commerce d'épiceries, entreprit une campagne de publicité afin de préparer l'opinion publique à un changement au système de ventes au comptant, et au premier mai 1919 un grand nombre d'épiciers adhéraient au nouveau système. Depuis, pour les raisons particulieres, plusieurs sont retournés à l'ancien système de crédit, bien peu sont restés fideles à la décision prise dans ce temps là. Cependant ceux qui ont strictement observé le système de ventes au comptant n'ont rien à regretter. Les temps sont changés, et aujourd'hui le client est satisfait de toujours payer comptant pour des achats réalisant que ce système élimine pour le marchand les pertes qui sont causés par les mauvais crédits, et diminue de beaucoup les frais d'exploitation, et qu'en retour le marchand est en position de donner plus de valeur et de service pour l'argent qu'il reçoit. Il n'y à pas à s'y tromper, avec le système de crédit, le bon client paye pour le mauvais client, et avec le système de ventes au comptant, le marchand est en position de donner au client au minimum du prix du marché le maximum de valeur et de service. On constate que les choses s'améliorent lentement mais sûrement dans le commerce d'épiceries, la confiance en des jours meilleurs renait un peu partout.

J. SAVARD.

35 Rue St.-Jean, Quebec, P.Q.

As Mr. Savard presents some ideas for all merchants to think about, we give herewith a general translation of his letter:

"Retail grocers have just experienced one of the most depressing periods of their history. It is said that several old established grocers have recently given up business, because profits became smaller and smaller in this branch of commercial activity. The sale of high quality and expensive food stuffs on which sufficiently good profit could be obtained has very much diminished since the war and today sales are limited almost entirely to articles of absolute necessity, on which the profits are not sufficient to cover the very heavy overhead expenses. There has, moreover, been keen competition and the losses inevitable in this business; a business which requires a large amount of work and care and yet does not give very encouraging results.

"It may be mentioned that what is happening was foreseen some three years ago when the Retail Merchants' Association of the city realized the future situation of the grocery trade, and undertook a campaign of publicity, in order to prepare public opinion for a change to the system of cash sales, and on the first of May 1919, a large number of grocers adopted the new system. Since then, for various reasons, several have returned to the old credit system and few have remained faithful to the decision taken at that time. However, those who have strictly observed the cash system, have nothing to regret. Times are changing, and today the client is always satisfied in paying cash for his purchases, realizing that this system saves the merchants from all loss caused by bad debts and lessens overhead expenses to a considerable extent. In return the merchant is in a position to give better value and service for the money he receives.

"There is no doubt that with the credit system, the good client pays for the bad client, but with a system of cash, the merchant is in a position to give his client minimum market prices and the maximum value and service. It is apparent that conditions are gradually improving and there is no doubt that in the grocery trade confidence in better times is becoming evident on all sides."

Editor, Canadian Grocer:

The letter in your issue of Feb. 24, under the heading "Mail Order Catalogues," presented very clearly a condition that affects every country merchant in Canada. Why run our parcel post department at a loss to accommodate the mail order houses? They have found a way to get out of paying full postage on catalogues, by using the express companies, and they use the postal department to save the express on parcels.

We have every right in the world to criticize our postal authorities, who run a department at a loss to accommodate the mail order houses. But there would be no catalogues if we were all on the same basis. We cannot blame it all on the postal department. At least their catalogues wouldn't worry us any. I know I have started something now, but I will give three cheers for the fellow who can finish it to the satisfaction of all of us.

The fact that they distribute their catalogues cheaper than we think they should, wouldn't affect us very much, if we also knew they had to pay the same price for their merchandise as we do.

Does it seem really fair that they can sell Chase's nerve food, gin pills, and all 50 cent proprietary articles at 31 cents. when we know what we have to pay? Do you think we small fellows get a square deal when they can sell all laundry soap at 13 bars for one dollar, and include a package of ammonia and a cake of toilet soap at that price? and as one manager said to me, "We make a profit." How do they sell Old Dutch at two for 22c, Gillettes lye 15c, Lux two for 22c, and make a profit? How do they sell 27 inches of gingham at 25c per yard, same patterns, same quality and from the same mill as that for which we pay 21½ cents; and 32 inch at 30 cents, the same as we pay 30c for, and print at 22c, that we pay 22½c for. There is only one way in which it can be done, and that is to buy direct and to buy in quantities. Some tell us, "they are only leaders, and sold at a loss." I know different—so don't let them ever bluff you.

Now then, what is the solution? It is simply "massed action." None of us individually are big enough, but collectively we are. Who sells the greater quantity, we fellows collectively or a few big fellows? Well then, who should get the favors if there are any? This condition will be just as it is today until such time as we all get together and tell the manufacturers what we expect of them. We are the ultimate distributors of all commodities used by the average family, and without us the manufacturer would find himself badly handicapped. Why does he favor the big mail order house and give us the thin edge of the wedge, when we give him the big end?

Let us all get together and work, that we may be all treated alike—big and small.

Yours truly,
George F. East.

Klienburg, Ont., March 2, '22.

Provincial Board Must Be More Representative

Vancouver, March 7, (Special).—The next executive meeting of the Provincial Board R. M. A. of British Columbia is scheduled for March 22, at 2.30 p.m., at Association Headquarters, Vancouver. J. T. Crowder, president of the B. C. Board, has sent out a special appeal to the various locals to send representatives to that executive meeting.

"Demands for service keep coming into this office from different localities," remarked Mr. Crowder to a Canadian Grocer representative the other day, "and owing to our not being in direct personal touch, by having a representative from these places such as Vernon, Prince George, etc., it is extremely difficult to co-operate with these business men. It is therefore imperative that we enlarge our Provincial Board of Directors and have at our regular meetings members from all parts of the Province. It would be quite satisfactory to have members from any or every branch there. In case of outlying districts, if impossible to send a man from every branch, it ought at least to be possible to send a man representing a district embracing several branches. For example, one man might represent the Kootenays, another the Okanagan, another the Northern Interior.

"My experience since last July convonces me that it is impossible for the Province Executive of four men, to attempt to represent the whole Province even partly satisfactorily."

TELLING BUYERS WHAT YOU MAKE

Sir Charles Higham, M. P., speaking at a meeting of the Federation of British Industries recently, said that every trade making British goods should advertise and tell the public why they should be bought. If they could not compete with the foreigner they must put up their shutters. If they could compete, they must "buck up and advertise." Every British man or woman should buy British goods and so help their own country. But they must know they were British goods. The Germans and the Japanese made their articles to look British.—The Times, London.

Will Ask Gov't To Restrict Oriental Immigration

Vancouver, March 7. (Special)—The Provincial Board of the Retail Merchants' Association, B. C. Board, is presenting a special resolution to the government at Ottawa, setting forth the views of the organized merchants on the Pacific Coast, in regard to Oriental immigration. The resolution points out that thousands of returned soldiers and others are unable to find employment, and the Dominion government has recently limited immigration from Great Britain and other European countries by stiffening immigration regulations, and in spite of these facts, immigration from the Orient continues practically unchecked, which if allowed to continue, must by sheer force of numbers alone offer a competition which no Canadian citizen, whether he be engaged in business for himself or as an employee of others, or engaged in any form of agriculture, can successfully meet. It is further contended that it is not in the best interests of Canada to permit the immigration of a people who can never be assimiliated into our national life, as has been proved by the experience of other countries.

The following is the circular referred to in the letter above:—

Dear Sir or Madam,—

Every housewife wants eggs that can be depended upon for quality. This letter suggests a way in which housewives may protect themselves from unsatisfactory results in the purchase of eggs and, at the same time, secure full value for their money.

Canadian eggs have been standardized as to quality. The legal grades are now in use for export purposes. It is clearly in the consumers' interest that they be adopted for domestic purposes as well. With this end in view, the Dominion Live Stock Branch has made arrangements with certain firms in your city to supply only eggs graded in accordance with the Government standards. One of these firms is the ——, which firm has referred your name to us as being one of their customers. The eggs supplied by them will be graded according to the Canadian legal grades:— viz., "Specials," "Extras," "Firsts," and "Seconds," and sold to you according to quality.

The following is a brief summary of the results of a recent series of experiments carried out by the Household Science Department of Macdonald College, in reference to the relative suitability of the different grades for culinary purposes.

Three types of experiments were used:—"Eggs served Alone" or "Eggs as Eggs;" 2. "Eggs as Lightening Agents" or "Eggs in Flour Mixtures;" 3. "Eggs as thickening Agents" or "Eggs in Milk Mixtures." Each experiment was carried out eight times.

Conclusions

Eggs grading as Specials are attractive in appearance when cooked alone or in combination with other foods, and give a delicious flavor to any prepared dish. These eggs are not found on the market at all seasons.

Eggs grading as Extras are very satisfactory, giving good results when cooked alone, or in combination with other foods. Extras can always be obtained and should prove very popular as the housewife can be sure of the results from this grade.

Eggs grading as Firsts may be used, but the flavor is not as delicious, nor the texture as good as when the higher grades are used.

Eggs grading as Seconds are not uniform in appearance or flavor. The stale flavor is much more noticeable in some than in others. Seconds should not be used as "Eggs served Alone," or in any mild flavored dish. They may be used for cooking purposes in any dish where a strong flavoring is used.

These conclusions, supported by personal experience, should appeal to the housewife as a means of determining the grade or grades which will best suit her requirements. When purchasing, specify the grade desired and insist upon getting it, preferably in a package marked with the name of the grade.

Yours faithfully.
W. A. BROWN (Sg'd.)
Chief of Poultry Division.

WEEKLY GROCERY MARKET REPORTS

Statements from Buying Centres.

MARKETS AT A GLANCE

THE raw sugar market during the week under review, was easier, with sales being made at 2 1-8c c. & f. New York for Cubas. There has been a heavy demand for raws with Canadian refined particularly active, purchasing San Domingo sugars and one cargo of Haytian. The price paid for these sugars ranged from 2 1-16c to 2 3-32c c. i. f. New York with some direct shipments to Canadian Atlantic refiners at higher parities, the actual sale prices being 2.21c c.i.f. Halifax, N.S., and 2.21c and 2.25c c.i.f. St. John, N.B. Business on the f.o.b. Cuban basis also transpired at 2.05c f.o.b. Cuba.

There are no new developments in Canadian refined sugar with quotations unchanged.

Cereals continue to indicate an upward movement with some advances on rolled oats. One brand of package oats is also quoted at a shade higher figure.

Teas in primary markets are strong with indications for further advances on spot.

Further strength in canned tomatoes and peas feature the canned goods situation. Supplies in canners hands are fairly well cleaned up and as stocks at other sources are not large and there are indications for a steadily growing strength until the new pack is available.

Spices, on account of the small spot stocks and the firmer position in countries of origin, are strongly held. Rices are higher at primary points but show little change in spot conditions, other than a stronger inclination on the part of holders to maintain a firm price.

Prunes are showing indications for an early clean-up at the Coast, while quotations have upward tendencies. Currants on spot have firmed, following the firmer situation in primary markets.

The feature in the produce markets is the abrupt termination to the high prices on hogs, both in Montreal and Toronto. The hog market has been steadily climbing for several weeks, but during last week packers set out to break the market. This they were successful in doing, owing to the fact that receipts were heavier than the requirements. As we go to press the market is still unsettled with packers continuing to offer a lower price. The production of eggs shows improvement, which, coupled with a lower market in Chciago resulted in the situation weakening at a lower basis. Cheese and butter show little change, remaining steady to firm.

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, March 9.—The grocery market shows stronger tendencies with some important changes and on the whole a much improved feeling and better buying. The sugar market is quite firm with more confidence behind it. Molasses may be expected to hold until at least the opening of navigation. The spice market is quiet but in rices there is more talk of an advance in local wholesale circles, after recent cuts. The tea market is gaining more and more strength with heavier buying and strong reports from primary markets. The coffee reports are bullish. Many lines of canned fruits are advanced while some jams are reduced in price. Bulk cereals are firm with more strength in rolled oats and Tillson's large package oats have advanced. Oranges are higher and pineapples are temporarily scarce. Strawberries are in better supply and likely to be lower. Tomatoes are easier with a declining market and larger supplies. Potatoes rule easy although reports are for a stronger market. Onions are still high. A number of soaps are reduced in price. Condensed and evaporated milk is lower in price. Another advance is quoted in California prunes.

ROLLED OATS STRONGER

Montreal

CEREALS—The cereal market is strong although there are no changes in local wholesale prices. Rolled oats are strong with a fair demand, which is only to fill immediate requirements.

CANNED GOODS—Canned goods remain unchanged with the cut in tomatoes holding although it may be suspended at any time. The feature of the market is the general advance in preserved fruits. The supplies are running low and the general condition of the market warrants an advance in this line. Preserved cherries are up to $3.20 for 2's Simcoe brand with other proportionate advances. Raspberries, strawberries, black and red currants, peaches and pears are all higher. The advance in most lines amounts to about ten, fifteen and twenty cents a dozen. The biggest advance is in cherries which are advanced forty and forty-five cents. Aylmer and Gazelle brand jams are reduced.

COFFEE GAINING STRENGTH

Montreal.

COFFEE—Although there are no changes in the wholesale coffee market the strength reported from primary markets is more and more certain. Sales locally fair but like teas, as soon as the break comes larger orders are expected since stocks carried by retailers are light.

ANOTHER ADVANCE IN PRUNES

Montreal.

DRIED FRUITS—Another advance in prunes features the dried fruit market. Santa Clara Californian prunes are now quoted at a basis of 2½ cents for the 30-40's which is an advance of one half cent. Currants are strong and raisins hold firm with a bullish report from the south. Local wholesale prices show no change.

MOLASSES UNCHANGED

Montreal

MOLASSES—There is no change in the molasses or corn syrup market. Prices are steady with a fair demand and no likelihood of a change in molasses until at least the opening of navigation. In corn syrup there is a fair demand with prices ruling steady.

NUT MARKET QUIET

Montreal.

NUTS—The nut market is quiet with a limited demand and prices are holding steady after the drop in walnuts and almonds. Retail prices have not yet shown the decline and this is likely to come just as soon as buying shows improvement and the old, more expensive stocks, are cleaned up.

WHOLESALE RICE PRICES STRONG

Montreal.

RICE—The local wholesale market for rice is unchanged but primary markets show a much firmer tone for Oriental and Southern rices. Since in the past few weeks there has been much cutting in the price of rice and the wholesale price is now below market value it is very likely that an advance in Carolina, Honduras and Rangoon rice will come in the near future.

STRONG TONE TO SUGAR

Montreal.

SUGAR—There are no new developments in the sugar market. Prices remain firm with less talk of a decline on account of lower exchange rates and more confidence throughout the market. Buying shows much improvement. As no sugar seems to be coming across the border, taking advantage of the smaller premium on American funds, the sugar market takes on a stronger tone in view of the better feeling in the raw market at New York.

BETTER BUYING OF TEAS

Montreal

TEAS—The whole tea market is in a strong position with a likelihood of higher prices on Ceylon and black teas. An advance may be precipitated at any time since the primary markets have already advanced and warrant a higher wholesale price. The buying of teas shows much improvement with a stronger market and for the first time in a number of years retailers are putting supplies aside for future use.

CONDENSED MILK REDUCED

Montreal.

MISCELLANEOUS—Borden's have reduced their prices on Reindeer condensed milk, Eagle Brand, St. Charles and on condensed cocoa. The new basis is $9.25 for Eagle brand, $3.20 a dozen for hotel size evaporated milk, Reindeer condensed milk $8.70, Reindeer condensed cocoa $3.00 per dozen for the large and $5.30 a case for the family size St. Charles evaporated. Carnation brand condensed milk, talls are reduced to $6.25 a case.

MANY REDUCTIONS IN SOAPS

Montreal.

SOAPS—There are a number of changes in soaps, all reductions. Shell brand castile soap is reduced to 15 cents a pound in bars. Sal soda is reduced 20 cents a hundred to $1.80. Ivory soap, ten ounce bars is reduced 70 cents to $13.00 and the 6 ounce bars, 25 cents to $7.85. P & G white Naphtha is reduced 25 cents to $6.85 a case and Gold soap the same amount. Lennox is quoted at $3.80 and Pearline at $6.00. All standard lines are reduced 25 cents to the basis of $6.85 for Surprise, Comfort, etc. St. Croix chips are quoted at $7.00 and St. Croix soap at $10.50 a case.

TOMATOES DECLINING

Montreal

VEGETABLES—Larger supplies of better sized tomatoes on the market are responsible for a declining price with a better demand than has been seen for this vegetable at this time of the year for many seasons. The price is expected to be even lower by the end of the week. The present quotation is $6.50 a case. Imported celery is reduced to $5.00 a case. Some dealers are able to dispose of first arrivals of asparagus, put up in four sticks to the bunch and costing wholesale $1.50 a bunch. Potatoes have failed to strengthen up as was predicted on this market and some retailers are able to sell at $1.50 a bag. Onions are still a luxury with no sign of decline. New crop cabbages are quoted at $3.50 a barrel.

LOWER PRICES FOR STRAWBERRIES

Montreal

FRUIT—Better supplies of fresh fruit feature the market. Strawberries are lower in price with the likelihood of another decline late this week. The present price is 65 cents a box. Recent shipments of pineapples were turned down on account of being under sized and this is likely to strengthen the market for the time being since local wholesalers have little on hand. Oranges are advanced 25 cents to $6.75 for Californian navels and a good demand. There is no change in the apple market.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, March 8.—Strengthening of many of the markets and an improved buying on the part of the retail trade has resulted in a better tone to business in wholesale circles. Stocks are low both in retail and wholesale warehouses so that manufacturers are also looking forward to a busy spring season. Beans and cereals continue in a strong position with advances on Ontario and lima beans, also rolled oats in bulk and a shade higher price quoted on one brand of package oats. Canned tomatoes are higher with peas likewise stronger. There are no new developments in the local dried fruit situation but primary markets continue to indicate a strong situation. Teas are strong with a likelihood for further advances. Rice at primary points is higher on certain grades.

BEAN PRICES HIGHER

Toronto

BEANS.—As a result of the scarcity of supplies, quotations on Ontario beans are advanced. Hand picked are quoted at $4.25 per bushel while No. 1 lb. pickers are bringing $3.85 per bushel. In smaller than bag lots quotations are 10c. per bushel higher than the above. California limas are also higher at 10c. to 11c. per lb.

TOMATO PRICES HIGHER

Toronto.

CANNED GOODS.—It is estimated that the balance of last year's pack of canned tomatoes is now fairly well out of canners' hands, with the result that the market continues to grow in strength. Wholesalers have advanced quotations on Aylmer brand to $1.80 per doz., while some of the independent brands are quoted around $1.70. Peas are likewise in a strong position with prices firmly held and some talk is heard on the street of higher prices. Corn is fairly steady at $1.45 per doz. although some independent brands are offered as low as $1.20 per doz. The Dominion Canners have placed on the market a smaller can of corn under the Lynn Valley brand. This can weighs 15 oz. net and sells to the retail trade at 95c. per doz. Happy Vale peaches, 2s, are quoted at $3.40 per doz. Crossed fish sardines are reduced to $14.75 per case. Libby's sauer Kraut, 2½s, is quoted at $1.75 per doz. Skipper sardines are reduced to $10 per case.

DRIED FRUITS HOLD STRONG

Toronto.

DRIED FRUITS.—There is little change in the local situation on dried fruits but at primary sources the situation is decidedly firmer. Prunes at the Coast are becoming stronger and the Association is looking for an early clean up from first hands. Currants for sometime past have been easier in the spot market than at primary points, but there has now developed a decided firmer tone to the spot situation.

SPICES HOLD FIRM

Toronto.

SPICES.—On account of the limited spot stocks and the higher values in primary markets practically all quotations are firmly held. Cream of Tartar appears to be the weak spot and in some quarters a reduction is noted, making quotations 35c. to 40c. per lb.

RICE MARKET HIGHER

Toronto.

RICES.—Primary markets continue in a firm position with some advances registered. In the local situation there is little change but in some quarters an advance is contemplated on account of the higher replacement costs.

SOME PRICE CHANGES

Toronto.

MISCELLANEOUS.—Maple Leaf matches, 400 to 500 count, are quoted at $15.31 per case of 48 packages. Royal yeast is reduced to $1.90 per box while Gillett lye is reduced to $5.25 per case. Bisto, small size is advanced to 90c. per doz. Castoria is reduced to $3.25 per doz. Carnation milk, cases of 48/16 oz. tins, is reduced to $6.25 per case. Campbell's soups are reduced to $1.60 per doz. in single case lots. Catelli's macaroni sauce is quoted at $1.90 per doz. The majority of laundry soaps are down 25c. per case making the new price $6.85.

NEW MAPLE SYRUP OFFERED

Toronto.

MAPLE SYRUP.—Some dealers are offering new make maple syrup to arrive March 23, at the following quotations:

8 lb. tins, 10 to case	14 50

STRAWBERRIES 85 CENTS

Toronto

FRUITS.—Navel oranges are fairly steady at $5.75 to $6.75 per case. Messina bitter oranges are slightly lower at $4.50 per case while lemons are also easier at $5.00 per case, Porto Rico pineapples 24s, are quoted at $8.00 and 30s, at $7.75 per case. Florida strawberries are in fair demand at 85c. per box.

TOMATOES LOWER

Toronto

VEGETABLES. — The potato situation continues easy at unchanged quotations. Mexican tomatoes in lugs of 28 lbs., dropped 50c. making the new price $5.50. Florida celery is lower at $4.50 to $5.00 per case. New Texas cabbage is down to $3.50 per 100 lb. case, while other lines of new Southern vegetables remain unchanged.

FLOUR HOLDS FIRM

Toronto.

FLOUR.—The flour market continues in a firm position but millers are not anticipating any further advances in the immediate future.

SCARCITY OF MILLFEEDS

Toronto

MILLFEEDS.—The scarcity of millfeeds show no improvement with the demand still greater than the supply. Quotations are unchanged as follows:

MANITOBA MARKETS

WINNIPEG, March 8.—Canned goods of all description are firmer. The coffee market continues firm and tendencies are upward. There has probably never been at this time of the year a stronger market for spot dried fruits and predictions are for higher prices on all lines. Prunes are reported scarce. The cereal market continues firm and quotations on Ontario and Michigan beans have advanced. The flour market is ruling steady. The shelled walnut market is advancing and almonds are firming up. A strong tone continues in the rice market. No change in the sugar market. The feature of the spice market has been the growing scarcity of practically all lines and values are likely to advance. Tea continues on the upward trend. There is practically no change in fruit quotations. New California vegetables are arriving and are meeting with a good demand.

CANNED GOODS STRONG

Winnipeg.

CANNED GOODS.—The past week has seen a local strengthening of all lines of canned goods. Some lines which have been offered at cut prices are withdrawn. Certain brands of canned fish are offered at an attractive figure especially sardines. Canned tomatoes are decidedly firmer and brokers report very few available. Sales have been made of standard Eastern tomatoes at least 30c. per case higher. Peas are scarce and firm. Corn is in good supply and attractive prices are quoted.

COFFEE MARKET FIRM

Winnipeg.

COFFEE.—Santos and Rio coffee continue firm with upward tendencies. Trading is showing a steady tendency and although buyers continue a hand to mouth policy it has resulted in a steady business. It is reported that the quality of the new crop will be below standard as it has suffered through the late rains.

PRUNES BECOMING SCARCE

Winnipeg

DRIED FRUITS.—There has probably never been at this time of year a stronger market for spot dried fruits. The comparatively small stocks confine trading to small proportions. Export trade has been a big factor in the dried fruit situation. Under the above conditions there is a general disposition on the part of all holders to keep quotations advancing, as the supplies diminish. Apricots, figs, peaches and pears are sold out. The week has been marked by the withdrawal of quotations by the prune association as they claim they have sold practically all their holdings. Locally the market is practically cleaned up of all low-priced stock and predictions are for higher prices on prunes.

CEREAL MARKET STRONG

Winnipeg

CEREALS.—The cereal market continues strong and can be expected to remain so long as wheat and oats show strength. Ontario prices on beans are considerably higher as a strong situation prevails in the market and prices have advanced $1.00 per bushel on Ontario with prices on Michigan beans being fully maintained. The local market is holding firm and prices have an upward tendency on these lines within the next few weeks.

NO CHANGE IN JAMS

Winnipeg.

JAMS.—There is no change in the jam situation. It is reported that some manufacturers are offering some odd lines at attractive prices as many of the more staple lines are practically cleaned up. Local quotations show no change and a better demand is noted.

SHELLED WALNUTS ADVANCING

Winnipeg.

NUTS.—The shelled walnut situation is firm. Reports state that there is only 44,000 cases in France and the yearly consumption of Canada and the United States is 180,000 cases. This shows a big shortage and has caused prices to firm up considerably. Shelled almonds are showing a firmer tendency as well and lines that are offered to-day are particularly good buying. Shelled peanuts are slightly firmer and are likely to continue on the upward trend.

STRONG TONE TO RICE

Winnipeg.

RICE.—The rice market is showing an improved condition. The demand for Southern rice is showing more activity. Chinese rice is reported scarce at the Coast as very few shipments are arriving due to the strike. Tapioca and sago are barely maintaining the present prices and easier tendencies are looked for.

REFINED SUGAR STEADY

Winnipeg.

SUGAR.—There are no new developments in the sugar situation. There is a good export demand for sugar from Europe and locally the demand has shown a decided improvement. Wholesalers quotations on sugar are from $7.80 to $7.90 per 100 pounds. Differentials on granulated sugar have been reduced.

STARCH PRICES UNCHANGED

Winnipeg

STARCH.—There is no change in quotations on starch. More activity is being shown as retailers are beginning to buy more freely.

SHORTAGE OF SPICES

Winnipeg.

SPICES.—The feature of the spice market has been the growing scarcity of practically all lines, a feature that is likely to exist and become more acute. Supplies in first hands are much reduced and values are likely to advance before adequate supplies can possibly be found. Declines are improbable in most lines.

TEAS CONTINUE FIRM

Winnipeg

TEAS.—The Ceylon market continues to move up steadily and is now on a higher basis. The position is exceptionally strong owing to the shortage of all tea in producing countries and there is no likelihood of lower prices. The Indian tea market continues quiet and quotations show little material change. Common tea is ruling steady.

LITTLE CHANGE IN FRUIT

Winnipeg.

FRUIT.—Quotations show little change as compared with a week ago. Navel oranges are fairly steady at $7.00 to $7.50 per case. California lemons show no change and are quoted at $8.00 to $8.50 per case. There is a fair demand for grapefruit at $6.50 to $7.00. Apples are in good demand and Rome beauties are quoted at $3.60 with winesaps and Spitz at $4.00 per box.

Why Interfere with a Wholesome Food?

Wholesomeness of Margarine is Not in Question, and Why Should an Edible Product Such as it is be Prohibited?—Vancouver Retailers Declare Consumers Have a Right to it as Long as There Is No Fault to be Found With It

By ROY H. HUNTER, B.C. Correspondent Canadian Grocer

VANCOUVER, March 4.—Among the trade in Vancouver, the remarks made by the Minister of Agriculture recently, which seemed to foreshadow action against the manufacture and sale of margarine in Canada, aroused considerable comment.

The packing houses, who manufacture and sell margarine from animal fats, are in a position to know how much is sold, and while stating that at present, due to the low price of butter, sales of margarine are slow, at the same time there is a definite market for oleo. In speaking about this subject one official said:

"It would be a mistake for even the cattle raisers to assume that the elimination of the competition of margarine would be an unmixed blessing for them. I can quite realize, that with butter selling for lower figures than in recent years, they would be casting around for a reason. It is a mistake to jump to the conclusion that margarine is in any sense an important factor in setting butter prices. On the contrary, the price of butter sets the price at which margarine will sell. It must always be cheaper than butter.

Wholesomeness is Unquestioned

"The wholesomeness of oleomargarine is not questioned. It is made from valuable, edible fats. Fats which must be sold. If good fats, that are suited for food, must be disposed of for such purposes as soap-making—and I doubt if the soap industry could use up the available supplies—then the farmer must be content with less for his stock. If the fats are not marketable to advantage, the stock raiser will be unable to collect as well for them.

"In the case of animal fat margarine, I consider that the major portion of it is bought by bakers, and housewives for baking and cooking. I consider also that the baker or housewife who wishes to buy this shortening has a perfect right to do so, nor has the government a right to interfere except the question of wholesomeness or injuriousness enters into the case, and this does not enter into the case.

"There would be large plants in Canada, built to carry on a legitimate and useful business, rendered comparatively valueless to suit the wishes of one class of the community, if the sale of margarine were interfered with, and all without any consideration for the consumer, who should be at liberty to choose for himself as his taste and his thrift dictates."

When Butter Soars Again

A. Urquhart & Co., Vancouver, manufacturers' agent, stated that although at the present time, the demand for margarine was light, a strengthening of the butter market would result in some increase. "I could give you the names of consumers and merchants who use nut margarine on their tables as a matter of preference," Mr. Urquhart continued. "Then there are the remainder who use it because of economy. As long as the government can find no fault with the product on the grounds of wholesomeness, I can see no reason in justice why the consumer should not be the sole judge of what he chooses to use. With the elimination of margarine competition, it would be presumed that when butter soared again, the consumer could pay the price, or eat dry bread. It is flying in the face of the public good to suppress competition in such a staple as flour, meat, bread, butter or any wholesome, economical alternative therefore."

A Dangerous Interference

"The dairying interests, may, for their own selfish purpose, attempt by legislation to eliminate their competition—though up-to-date margarine can hardly be dignified by the term competitor—it is a dangerous interference, and a dangerous precedent.

"The shingle interests in British Columbia, might, with equal justice, ask for a legislative enactment forbidding the importation or manufacture of prepared roofing, on the grounds that it interfered with the Canadian industry of shingle manufacture. The importation of all vegetable cooking oils and fats might be also stopped, as it keeps home grown lard from selling and soaring, and so the list might go on.

"The dairying interests have protected their product from margarine quite radically as it is. when you consider that in advertising a margarine, the word "butter" cannot be used in any connection. You may not say, "A butter substitute," "used instead of butter," "spread on bread like butter," "cheaper than butter," or any use of the word "butter" by itself or in combination. The word dairy or creamery is likewise forbidden. Also no manufacturer, wholesaler or retailer who sells margarine may deal in, sell, or give away butter coloring. I say, when you consider the safeguards that have already been put into effect, and compare them with the way any other Canadian industry has been protected, you cannot say that almost the limit has not been gone."

What Retailers Think

Interviewing some retailers here, Canadian Grocer finds the retailer holds no brief for either the dairyman or the margarine manufacturer. He studies the public's interest solely.

F. Filion, 204 Carrall Street, Vancouver, says, "A small percentage of my customers buy margarine. Unless the government has some fault to find with it on the grounds of health, there is absolutely no excuse for depriving those who wish to buy margarine of that which they desire. I don't believe in coercion."

Kirkham's Grocerteria (chain of 20 stores), Mr. Kirkham stated:—"So long as people know what they are buying, they are entitled to get it. The percentage of people who buy margarine is low just now, but some buy for economy and some for preference. The government has no call to step in unless the purity or wholesomeness is in question,"

Mr. Lamonte, butcher section, Hudson's Bay Store, stated, "We do not sell a great deal of margarine, but those who want it are entitled to get it. Any interference by the government is a dangerous step and wou'd be taken to indicate a new era of class legislation. The consumer's interest is the government's first obligation."

Con. Clarke, A. & C. Grocery, Vancouver, says; "The government has gone the limit of its duty and its right when it takes steps to see that oleomargarine is not foisted upon the public as butter. I consider that it has done this. For it to interfere further and prevent the citizens from buying wholesome margarine as margarine—that would be a most unreasonable usurpation of the individual's rights."

No Justification for Interference

Geo. S. Hougham, secretary, B. C. Board, Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, stated:

"Our association has gone on record for two successive years as favoring the unrestricted importation and sale of margarine. It is unlikely that our membership has undergone a complete change of mind in the interim. On the face of it, such action against margarine looks like the creation of another artificial barrier raised against the consumer, forcing him to buy in a restricted market. The way to success in production in this country lies along the lines of increased population, not in compelling the present population to pay higher prices than they need do. Always providing that the purity is protected, there is no justification for interference further, by the government."

It also transpired in conversation to-day that the boats plying from Vancouver use a lot of margarine as well as butter. Even the "Raleigh" the British warship here last bought a big quantity of margarine in addition to the butter purchased. If margarine is not procurable in Vancouver, it would not mean that butter would be purchased instead—it would simply mean that Seattle would ship what was required—in bond.

Prices Vary in Quotations on New Laid Eggs By These Grocers

Four Merchants in One Block Quote Four Different Prices and All Advertise Eggs as Being Strictly New Laid

MONTREAL.—The declining market for eggs has furnished a strong advertising point for a number of local grocers, and as a result prices on eggs vary considerably. Within one block, three grocery stores quote a wide margin in egg prices. The first grocer quotes 51 cents for new laid eggs, the second 48 cents, the third 43 cents and the fourth 38½ cents a dozen and all quoting strictly new laid eggs. While three of the grocers make a real feature of the produce line, advertising it in big letters across their windows and on sign boards in front of the store, there is something besides an advertising value in the incident.

Whom Does it Hurt?

Is it any wonder that the buying public wonder at the wide range of prices? If they wonder and begin to think is not someone's business going to be hurt by the conclusion? A Canadian Grocer representative heard some comments on the incident which the retail grocers in question were not privileged to hear. One passer-by said, "Those can't be fresh eggs at 38½ cents."

"Oh yes they can," said another, "the egg market is dropping quickly. I noticed an item in the paper about it and that grocery is evidently giving the public a square deal. Look at these other prices."

Had it not been for the newspaper item, the grocer quoting the lowest price might have got a black eye for his business. On the other hand the neighboring grocers were branded as unfair. There is no doubt that such a wide margin in prices is ground for doubt and it was unwise for those merchants to feature such prices, knowing, as they did, that nearby a much lower price was quoted. It was poor advertising after all.

To be fair to the trade it must be understood how quickly egg prices have dropped of late. Local wholesale quotations have dropped twelve cents in two weeks. In one particular case a grocer who on Wednesday, March 1st, quoted 60 cents for new laid eggs is now featuring them at 43 cents a dozen. Still he could not be expected to loose the whole amount had he had a stock on hand. But that is a weak excuse, an excuse that was given to a customer by a grocer recently but he forgot that he was advertising "strictly new laid eggs."

THIS MERCHANT SAYS GOODS ON RIGHT HAND SIDE SELL BETTER.

A Detroit dealer has proved by experiments that the right-hand side of his store is worth several times as much as the left-hand side for merchandising. He has tried shifting goods from the centre to the sides, and from side to side, with the result that he is firmly convinced that people have a tendency to bear toward the right side. There are at the rear of the store, for example, two telephones up on the walls, one on the left, the other on the right.

There is a directory beside each, and there is no apparent reason why one of these instruments should be used more than the other. Yet the fact remains that the phone on the right-hand side of the store takes in about four times as many nickels as the one on the left. A penny scale also took in far more coins after being shifted from a position on the left of the entrance to one directly across on the right.

This same dealer had a glass display of pencils on his front-centre showcase and the pencils were not moving at all well. He moved the display to the right-hand showcase, and the sales were immediately greatly increased.

Produce, Provision and Fish Markets

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, March 8.—As was expected the high prices on hogs attracted larger offerings and a reaction occurred with a drop in prices. Fresh pork is higher and smoked meats are steady. Lard is in better demand with an advance of one cent. Butter is a little scarce with an advance in prices. Stocks of butter have been pretty well cleaned up locally. The cheese market is firm without any change in wholesale prices. The egg market is the feature of the grocery trade with a rapidly declining market and a better demand. The poultry market is quiet and benefiting little by the Lenten season on account of the stiff prices. Fish is moving better with prices steady. There is no change in margarine and only a moderate demand.

BUTTER PRICES ADVANCE

Montreal

BUTTER—Receipts of butter locally show a big decline during the past week. Stocks of creamery butter were reduced to about 40,000 packages at the first of this month which, coupled with delayed arrivals of New Zealand creamery, has strengthened the market with a temporary scarcity. There is a steady demand for Canadian creamery butter and a much firmer feeling has prevailed in the market with advance prices. Creamery prints are advanced to 39c and 40c but certain grade creamery remain unchanged in price.

MARGARINE— Margarine prices hold with only a fair demand which is limited to a certain class of trade. Bricks are quoted at 22c.

HOG PRICES LOWER

Montreal.

FRESH MEATS—Reaction has come in the hog market with a decline of prices. Last week prices advanced steadily to $15.00 per cwt. but this price attracted larger supplies than were thought to be ready for the market and a weakness followed. Prices declined to $14.25 and $14.50 per cwt. for selected lightweight, weighed off cars. Packers are holding off and the weakness is likely to continue until an easier basis is reached. Prices on fresh pork are, however, higher with an advance of 2c on trimmed loins, making the price 31c and 32c. The beef market is unsteady but unchanged in price. Supplies offered are quite sufficient to cover the demand.

POULTRY MARKET SLOW

Montreal.

POULTRY—The poultry market is quiet with a smaller demand due to the high prices. The market is almost entirely served by storage stocks and the movement is slow. Dealers expected Lent to bring a better demand but this has not yet come and it may be that lower prices will be quoted to stimulate buying. Prices are unchanged.

WOMEN WANT OLEOMARGARINE

Ottawa, March 4.—A strong plea for the continued distribution in Canada of oleomargarine, was voiced by a delegation representing the National Council of Women, who waited on the Minister of Agriculture, Hon. W. R. Motherwell. The case was presented by Mrs. Adam Shortt, of Ottawa, who said she spoke on behalf of the women and children.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, March 8.—The high prices in the hog market came to a sudden termination during the week with prices dropping considerably. This is attributed to the fact that the big packers set out last week to break the market by sending out lower quotations. Heavier receipts of hogs is also an attributing factor, which coupled with a smaller demand from outside sources resulted in the break. The big packers are still endeavoring to further reduce prices by offering a lower bid for the balance of this week. Smoked bacon, hams, lard and shortening show advances in quotations. Butter is fairly steady but there appears to be a shade firmer undertone. Eggs are weaker and lower. Cheese is inclined to be easier in a quiet market. Barrel meats are higher while fish show no change in quotations under an active demand. Live heavy fowl and ducks are higher under a good demand.

BUTTER FAIRLY STEADY

BUTTER—The market shows little change compared with a week ago. There is still considerable New Zealand butter offered but prices are holding steady, although there appears to be a shade firmer undertone. Quotations on the best grades are running from 39c to 40c per lb. and on the lower grades around 35c per lb.

CHEESE MARKET QUIET

Toronto.

CHEESE—Under influence of a lack of enquiry for export, the cheese market is quiet with prices inclined to be easier. There is hope, however, that the cheese market will recover as there is still nearly two months to go before the new make is made to any extent. Dealers quotations to the retail trade are unchanged.

EGG MARKET WEAK

Toronto.

EGGS—Further weakness has developed in the market for eggs. This is due to the heavier production in Ontario and the lower prices in the Chicago market. Although the domestic production is steadily improving, it is still less than requirements, and heavy shipments continue to arrive from the United States. Quotations to the trade are down to 34c in case lots while extra select Ontario stuff in cartons, is bringing 38c per doz.

SMOKED HAMS HIGHER

Toronto

PROVISIONS—In some quarters small and medium smoked hams are advanced to 35c per lb. while others continue to quote 32c. Larger sizes are also advanced one to two cents per pound. Smoked boneless backs are quoted at 39c to 42c an advance of one cent per pound. Breakfast bacon, ordinary trim, is unchanged at 28c to 30c while special trimmed is quoted at 38c. to 41c. per lb. Barrel pork is advanced $1 to $2 per barrel; mess pork is now quoted at $34; short cut backs $36; pickled rolls lightweight $49 and heavy at $43.

BREAK IN HOG PRICES

Toronto

FRESH MEATS—The feature in this market is the sudden termination to the upward movement in hog prices with a drop of $1 per cwt. at the end of last week and 50c this week, making the fed and watered basis $13.00. For the past week the big packers have been endeavoring to reduce prices and in this they were successful, with the above results. Another reason for the break was the heavier receipts and the lack of buying by one of the big packers and the smaller packers. There are indications for a further reduction as the big plants are offering on the basis of 50c per cwt. lower. The cattle market continues firm with little change in prices. In dressed meats there is practically no change other than a slight advance on some fresh pork cuts.

MANITOBA MARKETS

WINNIPEG, March 8.—The produce and provision markets are again featured by higher prices for hogs. The strong tone in the hog market is also reflected in ham, bacon, lard and other hog products. Lard, smoked hams and bacon have advanced. The butter market is showing a firmer tone. There is no change in the cheese market. Large quantities of eggs are arriving from the South at lower figures. There is very little change in the poultry market. Receipts are light as likewise the demand. There is a steady demand for fish, with Holland herring in kegs, reported scarce.

BUTTER MARKET FIRM

Winnipeg.

BUTTER.—The butter market shows a firmer tone with quotations advanced 2c. per lb. Fresh made butter is not arriving in sufficient quantities to take care of requirements. Best creamery butter in prints is quoted at 42c. per lb. with solids at 39c.

HOGS MOVE UPWARD

Winnipeg.

FRESH MEATS.—Light receipts and a keen demand for hogs has resulted in prices soaring upwards. The market is unsettled and best selected live hogs are quoted at $12.50 per cwt. The cattle market is ruling active under a strong enquiry. Butcher heifers are quoted at $5.00 to $5.50. Extra good quality steers are quoted at $7.25. All fresh pork cuts have advanced in sympathy with the firm tone of the hog market.

Your Customers Will Appreciate This Service

THE housewife will appreciate receiving her eggs unbroken and in a clean convenient tray. Customers are being lost every day due to dissatisfaction over cracked or broken eggs, but not in stores where Star Egg Carriers are used.

They absolutely prevent this loss. There is no disputing the fact—you simply cannot deliver such fragile goods as eggs in paper bags or cartons without a certain amount of breakage.

Eliminating egg breakage is only one of a dozen ways in which the Star System for Safe Egg Handling will pay you dividends on your investment.

Star Egg Carriers and Trays are used by a large majority of the grocers in Canada that deliver eggs and they have unhesitatingly agreed that they cannot handle eggs profitably without the STAR SYSTEM.

Your Jobber will supply you and we will be glad to show you definite savings made possible by the STAR system for safe egg handling. Tell us how many eggs you sell per week and we will give you figures.

Is your egg handling equipment in condition to handle the big Lenten and spring egg business?

PRUNES FAST CLEANING UP

A recent advice from California says: "Packers suddenly realize that there is no tonnage of unsold prunes on the coast and they are endeavoring to secure resales on the large Eastern markets, resulting in sharp advances and various predictions of high spots the market will hit. It is conservatively estimated that the unsold stocks are not over 6,000 to 7,000 tons."

to HELP you sell them the year 'round

Now that prunes, thanks to Sunsweet, are a year 'round staple—now that Sunsweet advertising is at work every day educating your customers to eat prunes and apricots at all seasons—

It is only good business for you to tie up to this year 'round movement. Pictured here are some specimens of Sunsweet advertising that live grocers are using with telling and selling effect.

Here, for example, are full color display cards that show up great in the windows or inside the store; bright-looking streamers and price pasters that tell a big story in little space; educational recipe folders that show your customers how to keep the family food-bill down and the family health up; colorful slides for your movie advertising; a Retail Selling Price Chart by which you can price merchandise instantly and correctly on any margin from 20% to 30%; Paul Findlay's book, "Profits in Prunes" —filled with such clean, crisp profit-logic that it has caused a sensation among grocers the nation over—

All these advertising and selling helps are ready for you. We want you to have them. But, first, we want you to want them. We want you not merely to get them but to use them—and come back for more any time. Just check off on the coupon below which sales-helps you can use to good advantage—and we'll do the rest. California Prune and Apricot Growers Inc., 399 Market Street, San Jose, California. 11,000 grower-members.

☐ Recipe Folders: "Keep the family food-bill down and the family health up."

NEW DAYTON SCALES CONTEST

$1000 in cash prizes to merchants and clerks

Come in and Win!

No entry fee! Nothing to pay!

Turn your Ideas into Dollars!

Win a Nice Fat Cheque by a Little Brain-work

THE record of the Dayton Automatic Scale has been a story of improvement after improvement. We've seen the Dayton grow, and we've told the story chapter by chapter as added features brought new time and money saving advantages to Canadian merchants.

Some of the most helpful opinions we have had on Dayton Service have come from merchants who use and know and live with the Dayton. Continually, our salesmen are hearing from satisfied Dayton users of new advantages attaching to the use of the Dayton, which had never come to our attention. We're always glad to hear and study the opinions of the merchant—in city, town or country. We regard these opinions highly. They're valuable to use—so valuable that we're willing and glad to PAY FOR THEM.

The present $1,000 Prize Contest will be in the nature of a Clearing House for the ideas of merchants and clerks. To make it worth your while to put down on paper a short statement of these ideas we are offering to distribute $1,000 in prizes.

You know the Dayton. You've seen it in action day after day. Just apply your experience and observations to this question which we give you to answer.

Here is the Question

If you were a Dayton Salesman what reasons would you advance to sell a Dayton Scale?

Here are the Prizes

2	Prizes for the best answers	$ 100 Each
4	Prizes for the next best answers	50 Each
10	Prizes for the next best answers	25 Each
10	Prizes for the next best answers	20 Each
15	Prizes for the next best answers	10 Each

This contest offers you a fine opportunity to try your hand on the writing of an advertisement—as we will be glad to have your reply in that form if you prefer it to a written article. The only restriction we impose is that statements shall contain no inaccuracies or exaggerations, expressed or implied.

SHARPEN YOUR PENCIL—YOUR WITS, TOO—BEGIN TODAY!

List of winners will be announced in trade papers at close of contest.

Here's the QUESTION
Study it—we pay $1,000 for the best answers:

If you were a Dayton salesman what reasons would you advance to sell a Dayton Scale?

Rules of $1,000 Dayton Prize Contest

1. Contest will be closed June 30, 1922. No letter postmarked after that date will be accepted.
2. Write your replies on one side of paper only.
3. Contest is open to all merchants and clerks in Canada in stores wherein scales are used.
4. Each reply MUST bear the sender's name and address, and name of firm of which he or she is proprietor or employee. Should you be a prize winner this information is to be verified by someone representing that company.
5. You may send in as many replies as you wish.
6. A committee whose impartiality will be guaranteed by this Company will judge the replies and make the awards, such awards to be considered as final.
7. No employee of International Business Machines Co., Limited will be eligible for the contest.
8. Address your Contest letters to Head Office (not to any branch) as follows:

International Business Machines Company, Limited

FACTS!

You may be asked to stock unknown, untried brands of matches to the exclusion of EDDY'S which have always served you and your customers well.

So we put the facts clearly to you.

For 71 years, Eddy's have been making matches—so that, to-day, EDDY MATCHES are not equalled anywhere in the world.

In Eddy Matches, every objectionable feature is eliminated; EDDY MATCHES are non-poisonous and harmless if children eat them, yet rats won't gnaw them because we make them unpleasant to taste. EDDY Matches won't explode—the heads won't fly—the sticks don't break—EDDY Matches do not glow when blown out. Every EDDY Match is a safe, sure light.

Because of our enormous plant, up-to-date methods and output of 120,000,000 a day, we can not only make better matches, but we sell them cheaper. EDDY Matches give the dealer a larger profit.

It is sound common-sense to insist on EDDY'S MATCHES when ordering from your wholesaler.

ST. WILLIAMS

Your best Customers Consider more than Price

Merchants are getting tired trying to urge the sale of Jams and Marmalade that had been made up on a price basis for "cut rate" selling. Price is the last consideration in making St. Williams, we make first the best product we know how from the best materials we can buy—and sell at a fair price. That's why St. Williams is in glass jars—you and your customers can see the quality before you buy. If you stock St. Williams your best customers will always pick it out. It stands by itself—because "it's just a little better." Have you tried St. Williams Pineapple Marmalade—it is rich enough for the soda fountain—and a delicious preserve for the table.

INTEREST CHARGE ON OVERDUE ACCOUNTS

Can a merchant charge interest on an account say an account that is to be paid for in two weeks or a month? We have large mill trade and pay day is on the 5th and 20th of each month and each acct. is supposed to be paid on those dates. Can we collect interest after those dates?

R. A. Murdock,
Mill Roches, Ont.

Answer: The legal rate of interest is 5% where no other amount is mentioned in the undertaking. A maximum of 1% a month or 12% a year is allowed by law to be taken. It is necessary that the rate of interest on overdue accounts be agreed to in writing by the debtor in some way. This appears to be the law and it applies to Ontario. It would therefore appear that merely placing the words "Interest at 7% per annum carried on over-due accounts" on the statement does not give the seller proper legal protection in the matter. It would be necessary that this should appear on a contract or some such signed document.

Are Opposed to This Egg Resolution

Cake and Biscuit Manufacturers Will Not Favor Any Proposal to Make it Compulsory to State Country of Origin of the Eggs From Which Biscuits Are Made—Retailers Too, Are Against Any Such Move

A STORM of protest is being registered against the resolution passed at the conference of representatives of producers' organizations, wholesalers and consumers, at Ottawa last week, whereby all imported eggs other than those in the shell, shall come in packages plainly and distinctly marked, showing the country of origin, and that when used in the manufacture of foods, and where such foods are sold, a conspicuous sign with two-inch letters must be placed by the seller so that the consumer may know the country of origin.

Manufacturers of foodstuffs, in which eggs are an ingredient, and retailers who, should this resolution be put into effect, would be compelled to hang signs over certain foods saying that they were made with eggs from the United States or whatever country it happened to be, intend to make strong opposition to this proposal. Should the government seriously consider such a move, it will not become effective, only under vigorous objection.

Very Impracticable and Ridiculous

Biscuit and cake manufacturers declare themselves in no uncertain terms, in regard to the enactment of any such legislation. C. E. Edmonds, general manager of the Christie-Brown Co., Toronto, thought such a resolution was absolutely ridiculous and very impracticable "In the first place," he remarked, to a representative of Canadian Grocer, "the Canadian farmers do not produce enough eggs to keep manufacturers supplied, and we have to import eggs. We would much prefer to buy the Canadian eggs if it were possible, but it would be a bad outlook for this country if we were not able to get imported eggs. We use imported canned eggs in the manufacture of our products, but as far as the wholesomeness of the same are concerned, there is absolutely nothing to be said against them. The Medical Health Officer of Toronto some years ago, when there was some controversy in the matter, stated that the wholesomeness of these frozen eggs could not be questioned. They are fresh eggs put into cans, sealed, and frozen. Nothing better could be used in the egg line, by any manufacture. We have no objection to having these eggs inspected on their entry into this country, but for every dealer who sells any article of food in which imported eggs are an ingredient, to have to show a conspicuous sign stating the country of origin of the eggs in the product, is absurd, and I don't think could be successfully carried out."

Confectioners Will Oppose

C. J. Bodley, of C. J. Bodley, Ltd., cake manufacturers, Toronto, stated that it was the intention of the Confectioners' Association to ascertain the likelihood of such a resolution being adopted by the government. He did not think that it would be made effective, but if it should, it would not be without strong opposition from the confectioners of the country. Mr. Bodley, too, pointed out that there were not sufficient eggs produced in this country to meet the demand for them, and it is absolutely essential to use the frozen canned eggs. The latter are much cleaner than is often the case of the egg in the shell, and there is no question whatever of their wholesome ness. The best plants in the country are using canned eggs. To make it obligatory on the part of a retailer to show what country the eggs from which the cakes and other confectionery lines he is selling are made come from, is very unreasonable, and would not serve any worthwhile purpose.

H. A. Telfer, of Telfer Bros., West Toronto, expressed much the same opposition to any such proposal, as has already been stated here. A resolution of this kind is not practical and would work hardship on the trade. The canned eggs that are imported and used in the manufacture of confectionery and kindred lines, are very often preferable to the whole eggs and their wholesomeness can be better relied upon.

"This firm will certainly oppose any legislation of this kind," added Mr. Telfer.

Now Only Two Standards

Discussing with R. S. Whyte, president of the Canadian Produce Association, the resolutions passed at this conference, Mr. Whyte, who attended, told Canadian Grocer that all produce men in the association at any rate, graded eggs, whether Canadian or American, before they were sold to the retail trade. They are graded, he said, according to two standards, namely, boiling and cooking eggs, not as American eggs or as Canadian eggs. As far as the Chinese eggs are concerned, he did not think that any were being sold in the shell in Canada. It is absolutely essential to bring American eggs into this country, in order to meet the demand at a time when there are very few being produced. Storage eggs are always pretty well disposed of by the first of January. The question arises as to whether it would be better to store the eggs that are now exported in the fall, for home consumption, or rather export them and replace them with fresher imported eggs from the Southern States. In the future Mr. Whyte stated that the association will distribute imported eggs in the original packages or in packages marked showing the country of origin.

Egg-Marking Act in B.C.

In British Columbia there is an egg-marking act, requiring each retail food merchant to display above his egg display in letters of a prescribed prominence, the country of origin of the eggs he is selling, but at the present time the merchant is forced to proclaim a fact of which he has no means of verifying the truth. He buys eggs by the case. He asks for B.C. fresh, and, presuming that B.C. eggs have been supplied to him, he displays the card stating the fact that his eggs are B. C. fresh. The odd part of this business is the fact that in the last year just about 1,000,000 dozen eggs have been imported into B.C. from the Pacific Coast States, and, according to the poultry officials, only one or two retailers have been known to display a sign reading, "Washington fresh," or "Oregon fresh" eggs. There is at present no means by which the retailer can know.

Moreover, it is claimed the eggs that are shipped to this market are not, generally, the best quality eggs from that state. They are mostly "store gathered," the eggs collected by the country merchant from various small producers and shipped into the cities. These are discounted 2 cents per dozen on the American market, being considered of lower grade than the eggs marketed by the great co-operative poultrymen's associations.

Then again, these eggs shipped to Canada are culls. The large eggs, the white eggs, are picked out and sold on the New York market at a premium. Thus the resultant remainder is underweight compared with the way the average B.C. shipment grades out.

Retailers Dissent

The resolution as referred to at the opening of this article was moved by Prof. W. R. Graham, Guelph, Ont., and seconded by G. E. Kyle, Vancouver. It was carried with the retailers dissenting. Retailers were also opposed to the resolution requiring that all invoices covering the delivery of foreign eggs in shell or otherwise state clearly the country of origin.

Vancouver retail grocers at a recent meeting discussed the egg question, and forwarded their resolution to Ottawa for the conference last week. They endorsed the resolution in regard to invoices and as just referred to, also advocating that the quality of eggs imported into Canada, for domestic consumption, be such as would make it a desirable product for consumption in Canada, this proof to be submitted in such form as is ordinarily required by the Customs Department, that imported eggs be distributed in original packages or in packages marked with markings similar to those required on the original packages, that all merchants, wholesale or retail, advertising eggs for sale, be required to state the grade of eggs advertised.

Advocates Uniformity in Labels

Many of the Larger Food Firms Have Changed From the Individual Package to "The Family Line" Policy—Each New Line Helped by the Reputation of the Old

By F. E. ROBSON, President, The Carlton Publicity Service of Canada

Editor's Note—This is the first of a series of articles on the importance of design, color and style of packages. F. E. Robson, the writer, has had a long connection with the grocery trade. He represented Old Country food manufacturers in Canada for 16 years. For three years he was president and managing director of a chain of grocery stores. He was later business manager of a large publicity organization in London, Eng.

THE largest merchandizing firms in the world are now spending thousands in standardizing design and color.

Look at the pages of any modern magazine and study the design and color of the packages advertised, compare their packages of three years ago. You will find that the largest firms in the merchandizing business have changed their individual packages to "a family line." The best brains in modern publicity favor "institutional advertising."

The products of a number of the large food manufacturers are good examples of the family line advertising. When one of them brings out a new product it bears the familiar family label which at once inspires confidence and quality in the product. All the previous advertising of the well-known design is reflected in the new line. If a firm brought out a new label on each line, not only would the cumulative advertising be lost but public confidence would be disturbed.

It requires courage to change old established labels with which the trade and the public are familiar into "family line designs." There are many who fear trade will be lost and some who dislike change of any kind.

In fairness to the new principle of "family line" design and institutional advertising let this fact be known. Many firms distributing millions of packages a year have turned from individual labels to institutional labels. Some have scrapped several hundred thousand perfectly good and well-known labels simply because they did not conform to institutional design. As yet no case is known of disaster following the venture and certainly no firm has gone from institutional design back to individual labels.

The institution is first. The individual package (or any individual for that matter) is secondary. A firm's reputation should guarantee every article they produce. Individual articles with varying labels seem to rest on their own merits rather than on the stability of the firm.

Institutional advertising has now progressed so far it would seem unnecessary to advocate it further. While there is ample evidence of its success yet there are many large concerns which might advantageously undertake it.

Not only is well-planned institutional advertising most productive, but it also cuts out a great deal of waste. Creating new designs for each separate article is very expensive and it continues to be expensive in necessitating separate runs in printing and separate plans in each and every development made.

The thousands of dollars spent each year by the progressive manufacturers in making better packages has a direct bearing on the sales of all grocers handling their lines. It is a time-worn adage that "goods well displayed are half sold." So it becomes of vital interest to every merchant to co-operate with manufacturers in raising the standard of labels because it will improve the appearance of the store and increase sales.

Montreal Retailers Are Opposed to This Resolution

Montreal.—One hears much these days about the importation of Chinese eggs, particularly in the newspapers, but as for the sale of these eggs, little is known. Yet it is stated that they are in Canada. One local dealer states that in Montreal at present, as far as he knows, there are none but that in the course of six or eight weeks some will be here. Just what effect, if any, this will have on the local market it is hard to say. Canada, during the twelve months ending, January, 1922, imported $2,705,548 worth of eggs but that statement is apt to be misleading, as far as Chinese eggs are concerned, for a large part of this importation is of canned eggs which find their way to the manufacturers.

How About Eggs in Shell?

But how about the eggs in shell? One never sees "Good Chinese Eggs" advertised. Dealers assure us that a certain amount do find their way to the retail stores but there they lose their identity. This is one of the points that was taken up most strenuously at Ottawa last week by the convention of dairy interests of Canada. Those produce dealers from Montreal who attended the convention refuse to make any statement, apart from the official report of the convention and the resolutions then adopted.

Must Show Country of Origin

Local retailers, interviewed on this subject by a Canadian Grocer representative, do not object to the idea of labelling packages, but they feel that it is asking too much to require each sale of imported eggs to be recorded on the invoice as "Chinese eggs" or U. S. eggs." Moreover, the proposal made to the government that manufacturers using imported eggs in food-stuffs shall be forced to display a sign on their goods, where offered to the consumer, stating that the eggs were imported from "such and such a country," has met with most strenuous objection from the retailers and needless to say from the manufacturers.

Co-operative Marketing Helps Retailer

Aaron Sapiro, of San Francisco, Cal., Tells Producers of the Advantages to be Gained Through Co-operative Selling of Their Products—Retailer Benefits Because of Stabilized Prices

By Staff Representative Canadian Grocer

TORONTO, March 15.—Outlining the advantages to be gained by producers, through the system of co-operative marketing, Aaron Sapiro, of San Franciso, recently talked to a large audience in Convocation Hall, in this city. Mr. Sapiro related in a most graphic and convincing style, the transformation that had been brought about in the State of California, in the lives and affairs of the farmers of that State, as a result of co-operation in the marketing of their products.

Co-operative Selling—Not Buying

Mr. Sapiro's remarks were entirely along the lines of co-operative selling rather than buying, and his purpose in Ontario at the present time is to show the Ontario producer that by following the example of the California grower, he will find better markets and better prices for his products than is the case at the present time. From a condition, almost of chaos and ruin, to one of prosperity and happiness, the farmer in the Pacific Coast State had been raised, through co-operation. To-day the tobacco growers and the cotton growers in the south are likewise co-operating. Merchants, bankers and manufacturers, Mr. Sapiro pointed out, had all benefited by the system. In fact rural communities in California had been raised to a standard of living and prosperity, that led all other states of the Union.

Reviewing the history of co-operative marketing, Mr. Sapiro remarked that primarily both the United States and Canada were agricultural countries, and neither could be prosperous unless agriculture was prosperous. Co-operative marketing was in vogue in Denmark, Italy, Germany, Austria and to some extent in Russia. But of all the nations of the world, the United States and Canada had been the most backward to adopt it, at least on the proper basis.

Many Experiments Tried

Before the awakening to this new scheme of marketing, conditions in California were in a deplorable way, chiefly for the reason that the State was so far away from its markets that distance seemed a formidable object to overcome. Thus leaders of the farmers were forced to study a way to save the agricultural industry from absolute ruin. California became a huge economic laboratory. Every conceivable experiment was tried. The Danish system, the Piedmont method from Italy and the English consumers' stores were all tried but ultimately failed. The earlier mistakes were caused by trying to maintain the local group system. How this turned out unsuccessfully, Mr. Sapiro instanced that the market for, say, oranges, in Kansas City, might be good, while that in Chicago would be low. The manager of each group, thinking he was a little keener than his associates, would ship his stuff to Kansas City, with the inevitable result of a "glut" in Kansas City, and a famine in Chicago. Fruit would thus rot by the carload in Kansas City. It took some time to discover that blunder and the remedy for it.

Organize by the Commodity

"When you start in to market you have to organize by the commodity, not by the locality," continued Mr. Sapiro. "When this great principle was grasped all shipments of fruit were routed through one office. This office knew at any moment how many carloads of fruit were in any city in the United States or Canada, and how many more were moving toward any particular place. If, for instance, Toronto's capacity was twenty carloads a week, and there were 10 carloads here, five on the way from Florida, and ten from California, five of those ten would be diverted to some other market.

"We have stopped dumping and substituted merchandising of agricultural crops This means the centralized control of these crops so that they move to such markets and at such times that the market can absorb the crop at a fair price."

Steps in Merchandising

The various steps in the merchandising process, Mr. Sapiro outlined as follows:

1. To inspect and grade and improve the quality of the crop.

2. To get the right and proper type of package.

3. To extend the market period as to time.

4. To extend the market as to place and location.

5. To control the movement of the crop by conditions at the point of consumption, instead of at the point of production.

The speaker pointed out that as the farmers of Ontario sold, and as the farmers of California used to sell, the price was determined by the supply at the point of production. The price should be determined by the supply at the point of consumption.

Hon. Manning Doherty, Minister of Agriculture in the Ontario Legislature, presided. Premier Drury and J. J. Morrison also spoke.

Canadian Grocer interviewed Mr. Sapiro at the conclusion of his address.

"What effect has the system of co-operative marketing you have described on the retail merchant selling oranges, for instance?" he was asked.

"It has had the effect of making oranges a more stable proposition for the retailer," he replied. "There are not the violent fluctuations we used to have. The retailer buys his normal supply to-day, knowing that the price will be maintained tomorrow and the next day. Depreciation from rot is practically eliminated, because the fruit is marketed quickly.

"The oranges, being graded, are sold to him on a quality and size basis, and the merchant always knows what he is buying and selling."

The same, he pointed out, applied in a general way to the raisin growers, the prune and apricot, the peach and fig, the walnut and almond growers. The bulk of the products of all these producers was marketed co-operatively, through the centrally located organization in each case.

"Did you have much opposition from the trade that buys and sells these products, when changing your system?"

"Very little. A few wholesalers raised objections but more, of course, was heard from the speculator, who was eliminated in this process of change. But we were not particular about what happened the speculator."

MONTREAL AGAIN ADOPTS DAYLIGHT SAVINGS MEASURE

Montreal.—Montreal city council has again adopted daylight savings, and on April 30, theofficial time of the city will be set back one hour. The change to old time again will be on October 1. Alderman Sansregret, a local grocer who heads the council, proposed that the question be delayed for one week to give the aldermen time to investigate the reasons given by many who petitioned against "Daylight Saving" for this year. The council rejected this motion however, by a vote of 18 to 15. The "Daylight Saving" bill was passed by the council with a vote of 23 for and 10 against. Alderman Sansregret was one of the alderman who voted against the bill. The Montreal Publicity Association, backed by many of the retail firms, manufacturers and local institutions was active in agitating for the adoption of this summertime measure again this year.

Turn the Light on Your Business

Editor of Canadian Grocer Addresses Gathering of Grocers in Sarnia, Ont., on Some Phases of Present Day Methods of Doing Business—A Lively Discussion Follows

SARNIA, March 14.—A special meeting of the Retail Grocers' Association was held here last Thursday evening in the Board Room of the Chamber of Commerce Building. This meeting was called for the purpose of discussing the wave of price cutting which has been going on for sometime among the retail grocery trade of the city. J. L. Wyckoff, Editor of Canadian Grocer gave an address on the folly of price cutting and present day merchandising, illustrating his talk with actual figures on a blackboard. After the address, the members present were invited to ask the speaker any question upon the subject and a general discussion followed on the correct method of figuring margins. Prices of various articles were taken as examples and Mr. Wyckoff plainly showed that on many of them, the merchants were taking a loss. At the conclusion of the meeting Robert Kirby, secretary of the Association said: "If there are any merchants here tonight who are not readers of Canadian Grocer, just let me say, don't lose any time subscribing to it. You will get more than your money's worth every week in the year. I have always found Canadian Grocer a great help to me.

"If you ask them a question, you get an answer promptly and if at any time they have not the information immediately at hand, they go to all kinds of trouble to procure it, even to far corners of the continent."

The following is the substance of Mr. Wyckoff's address:—

In opening the question of price cutting for discussion, one is inclined to ask what is the definition of price-cutting?

Can a merchant be classed as a price-cutter who buys goods below the market value, sells below the market price and at the same time show a fair margin of profit? Or can price-cutting be defined as selling goods below a regular set price irrespective of whether the merchant has made a profit or not? If this is so, and there appears to be many who think so, then who is to say just what the regular price is to be in order to show a profit to merchants situated in all communities, supplying all classes of citizens? You will all agree that the store rendering the public a real service, delivering goods, giving credit, must necessarily mark its merchandise to get a greater margin than the store which does not give any of these services. The biggest point to my mind, to the question of price-cutting is, have you made a profit based on replacement value plus overhead expenses?

According to a survey of the retail grocery business, the average cost of doing business is 16½ per cent. Some stores are operating at a lower figure than this, but there are others whose overhead will run as high as 18 per cent. Add to this, say 2½ per cent. to take care of shrinkage, loss by petty pilfering and carrying charges, and you have your cost of merchandising 19 per cent. To this amount must then be added a certain sum that will give you a fair profit at the end of the year, to repay you for the chance you have taken on prices falling and a just return on your investment.

But, it is regrettable to notice that there are many merchants who are not even getting their own money back. Competition being so keen, undoubtedly, some merchants are overlooking the most part of their business. That is the making of a profit. By profit, I mean, the actual amount of money to put in your pants pocket after paying all bills and after allowing yourself a fair salary.

I recently ran across a merchant who offered sugar to the amount of 25 lbs. at the rate of five cents a pound, provided that the customer would also purchase at the same time five dollars' worth of other groceries.

Now, how does this figure out? Take sugar costing $7.00 per hundred. This merchant was losing fifty cents on every 25 pounds, or practically speaking, on every $5.00 worth of groceries, not including the sugar, he was handing back to the customer fifty cents. In other words, he was giving away ten per cent of his gross margin. Let us say that most of the orders received under this plan were for fast-moving articles, upon which the average mark-up is 25 per cent. We will say the cost of operating is 16½ per cent., plus 2½ per cent carrying charges. Therefore every order for $5 worth of goods would cost $3.75. The cost of operating plus carrying charges is 19 per cent. on sales, or 95 cents, making a total cost of $4.70. Now, then, this merchant gives back to the customer 50 cents, which represents the loss on the purchase of sugar. The whole transaction, therefore, shows a net loss of 20 cents.

This merchant claimed the sugar was used as a leader, to induce people to trade at his store, as an advertisement.

But was there any real advertising value in the scheme? I doubt it. There was certainly no profit.

Another store offered canned tomatoes at two cans for twenty-seven cents, as a week-end inducement. These tomatoes cost this merchant $1.59 per dozen, which showed a loss of seven cents per dozen on the invoice cost, or figuring in the cost of operating, a straight loss of 38 cents per dozen.

Merchants Fooling Themselves

There are hundreds of other instances of a like nature, where merchants are reducing their selling prices below the replacement cost basis, and fooling themselves into believing that by so doing they are throwing out an inducement to people to trade at their store.

And the unfortunate part of it is, usually it does not end with using one or two lines as leaders. Other articles are added to the list of "no profit" goods, and gradually the merchant finds himself handing out dozens of articles at prices that do not nearly represent the total cost, instead of one or two as originally intended.

Now, what happens in a community where one merchant is using such tactics?

Like an epidemic of measles, we find other stores following suit, believing they must do so in order to hold their trade. Business is demoralized. Confidence of customers in their grocer is in the balance. They begin to lose faith in him and are led to believe that the merchant, who is selling his goods at a just profit, is profiteering.

Apparently the chief object of these merchants is to sell goods, but you must remember that you can pack your store with customers and at the same time ruin yourself.

Anybody can sell goods at a price that does not represent the market value. It requires no great effort of salesmanship to do that. The main thing in selling, is not to attract a crowd by advertising a popular line at a cut price, but to sell merchandise at a profit.

And when I say profit, I do not mean the margin between the buying and the selling prices, but the balance that can be used for investment after all bills have been paid.

Turnover Not Always Profitable

It is frequently remarked that a merchant can afford to lower his selling price, by increasing his volume of turnover. That is very true, providing his mark up is sound and profitable.

To understand this more clearly, let me illustrate this point by an actual occurrence.

A few years ago a young man decided to enter business for himself. He was a thorough grocer. He had made a special study of the business and from a salesmanship point of view was well qualified to launch into a business career on his own hook. He managed to scrape together a few thousand dollars and eventually opened a store. He had been educated in stores which enjoyed a high-class trade, and naturally when he opened his own store, he followed to a certain extent the policy as outlined by the firms he had been working for. His connections were good so that in a short time business was on a fairly sound foundation. For five years he continued along the lines as first mapped out, and each year showed a nice increase over the preceding year. Then someone whispered in his ear that if he would only reduce his selling prices, his business would go ahead by leaps and bounds. His friends argued that by reducing his selling prices, the increased turnover would more than take care of any reduction in price. After many months of thought and discussion, the young man decided to give the plan a trial. The first week showed such an increase in sales that he was firmly convinced that that was the only way to do business. Business went humming along for several months. He increased his selling staff, put on more deliveries, and every week, sales showed a big increase and apparently he was making money.

Then came a day when he found it becoming difficult to meet his bills on time, some discounts had to be passed over. But, mind you, the cash receipts were steadily growing. There was something wrong, but where was it? He was figuring his selling prices on what he considered would show a profit, basing them on his previous year's cost of operating. One day he received a bill for $150 covering the repairs on his delivery cars for the month. Like a flash the thought came to him, that he had struck the real reason for being so hard up. He went carefully, step by step, over all expenses. He found that the business previous to adopting the new selling campaign, was carrying as large an expense account as it possibly could afford. But in pushing harder for business by decreasing margins, he did not figure the additional cost in getting the business, and while the gross sales were secured, he found the expense had paralleled the increase. Extra salesmen, increased advertising space in the newspapers, and additional delivery bills, made the extra sales cost even more than the regular business.

And there you have one of the serious fallacies quite common to the retail grocery business. You cannot increase your profit, by cutting your selling prices, unless you likewise reduce your expenses. Merely increasing your turnover will not do it, because your expenses will also increase.

Watch Small Items of Expense

I was in a co-operative store not long ago and in conversation with the manager asked him what were their operating costs. He replied 9½ per cent. Six months afterwards, when the books were balanced for the year, the company showed a net loss of several thousand dollars. Investigation showed that several items of expense were not taken as running expenses, consequently selling prices were marked too low.

So I cannot too strongly urge you merchants who may be contemplating cutting your prices, thinking that by so doing you can afford to do so because the turnover will be increased, to beware of that little word "expense." It is the rock upon which many a promising business has been wrecked.

Another merchant told me that his overhead was 10½ per cent, everything figured in. When I was talking to him a fashionably-dressed woman came into the store and, interrupting our conversation by requesting a donation to a charity affair. Without hesitation the merchant put his hand in his pocket and handed the woman a five dollar bill.

"To what account do you charge that?" I asked him.

"Oh, I don't put it in any regular account. In a case like this it is good business," he replied.

Further enquiry showed me that this merchant was giving away sums of a like nature amounting to upwards of $200 a year. He did not charge it up to advertising or to any other expense, but just considered it good business and let it go at that.

Was there any wonder his overhead only showed 10½ per cent on his books?

As I was looking around in another store, the proprietor went to the cash register and extracted thirty cents, handed it to one of the clerks and told him to slip across the street for a couple of rolls of crepe paper. It developed that this paper was to be used for decorating the window, so I casually remarked to the merchant that "I supposed he charged that thirty cents to advertising." He replied it was only a small amount, and did not bother to keep track of such little sums. Think of it!

If there is any merchant here tonight who is guilty of such business negligence, I just want to say that in a quiet moment take a pencil and paper, figure up if you can, the various small sums of money which have been spent out of the business for such items as decoration, window cleaning material, pencils and tickets to concerts which you bought just because a customer asked you.

The answer will be a revelation to you. It will open your eyes to the fact that these little items of seemingly outside expense, are in reality regular running costs. You will also be convinced you have found at least one of the reasons your profits this past year were not as large as you anticipated.

I might also say a word here in regard to the Sales Tax. What are you doing with this 1½ per cent which is tacked on to the cost of fully one-third of your merchandise?

Are you adding it to the cost of your merchandise or are you simply considering it just a small item and forgetting all about it? I would say that the best way to get back this Sales Tax is to charge it up as a running expense and figure it as an overhead.

Some of you may question the remarks I have made about the importance of looking after the small items of expense. You may think it sounds all right in theory, but in actual practice it is a lot of bunk.

Let me impress upon you that there are hundreds of merchants all over Canada who claim the reason they have been able to lay aside certain sums of money for the proverbial rainy day out of the earnings of the retail grocery business, was due entirely to the fact that they have always paid the strictest attention to little items of expense.

Listen!

A short time ago I was in a retail grocery store in Toronto. This merchant invited me to look over a three-flat apartment house he was building. This building is costing him $16,000. He also showed me plans for remodelling his store and dwelling above, at a cost of $8,000. His intention is to live in the centre apartment of the house. The lower and top apartments are leased for a two-year term and will bring him $175 a month with the rent of his own apartment thrown in for good measure. The dwelling over the store which he is now occupying, after remodelling, will bring him $115 a month, more than enough to carry the whole building. His store rent is therefore practically free. But he does not consider it as such, and tacks on to his running expense of the business $65 per month rent.

He showed me his system of recording his business. He has a complete record of every transaction. Glancing over the expense account, I noticed even the smallest item charged in its proper place. I saw an entry for lead pencils which last year totalled $2.85. Everything was there, even to cost of a paper of pins used around the store.

This merchant was not taking any chance of his mark-up being too low. His expense account told an accurate story of his costs. He knew to a fraction of a cent just what every article in the store cost to sell, so that he was in a position to mark his selling price on a safe and sound basis.

Adaptable To Country Towns

I called recently on the trade in one of our small country towns. One of the merchants there complained about business being bad and that a merchant had no chance to make any money in a small country town. By asking questions I soon got at the root of the trouble. The real trouble was he had no conception of what it cost him to do business. I noticed many articles around the store which he was selling practically at invoice price. He was basing his profit on cost instead of selling price. I tried to convince him of the necessity of knowing his exact cost of selling an article before he could decide upon a selling price, which would allow him a just profit.

When the Inventory Does not Pan Out

Another Grocer Seeks Analysis of His Statement—Admits That He Has Been Somewhat Slack About Small Expenses, But Just Cannot Figure Out Where The Trouble Lies, Following the Revelations of His Inventory

By HENRY JOHNSON, Jr.

HERE ARE related troubles the like of which many merchants are apt to face at this time:

Henry Johnson, Jr.

Canadian Grocer.

Dear Sir:—Having completed my inventory I send figures in full. There is something wrong somewhere although I supposed I knew something about bookkeeping. I charge freight every month to merchandise purchases. I pay for produce in cash out of the drawer, slips being added at night and charged to merchandise purchases. The slips are figured as part of cash sales which otherwise would be in the drawer. I balance cash every night and the amount shown by balance at the bank plus cash on hand less cash balance of night before, less collections constitute cash sales as I have no register. I carry no account in ledger as I keep a register of all checks and deposits and balance that every night. Cash on hand includes all cash, in bank and in drawer. This year have done all my work so there has been no chance for anybody to get away with anything, but there is a wide discrepancy between figures and facts. Business last year was over $61,000, but we have had no crops for three years and stockmen have had tremendous losses in values, besides heavy feeding in hard winters. From now on I do not expect to use as much as a pencil, without charging it up to expense. Probably I have been somewhat slack about small expenses of a quarter here and a dollar there for small items, but I cannot believe that is any way to account for the wide discrepancy shown. Under local conditions I am glad to show any profit for I fear a great many will show loss. My records show my business about $6,000 credit, balance cash. I believe that by installing system I can get things down to where I shall know exactly where I am at.

Yours truly,

Reflection of General Conditions

Maybe this man need not feel very badly in face of such a showing. It is a disappointment to find a theoretical gain of $1900 cut down nearly $1400, as I know from keen personal experience, but I can assure my friend that "there are others" and plenty of them these days.

Only about a month ago a wholesale grocer whose business had been uniformly profitable for many years up to the end of 1919, told me that the past two years had shown him severe losses. Then he smiled, though not very heartily, as he said: "I have one comfort. We have less debts than we had a year ago!" Of course, we know jobbers have suffered in greater proportion than retailers, but this is what a jobber has gone through who is well posted in his business, long experienced, in position to know every fact of his affairs and not given to sidestepping or blinking any facts.

So perhaps this man has the answer himself, when he says: "I am glad to show any profit, for I fear a great many will show a loss." At the same time, the "uses of adversity" will not produce for him unless he takes the happenings of this time as something to study.

I really cannot glean from his figures any inkling of precisely the trouble. We have here a record showing expenses of just over nine per cent. on sales, and I can see only one item not included. That is interest. Assuming that at one per cent. additional, we shall have only a little over 10 per cent. total, and that surely is as little as anyone could wish or hope for.

But something has happened. It is our business to find out just what it is that we may remedy it for the future. I suspect that declining values have hit this man harder than he has realized. Perhaps—very likely—this has been coupled with the usual reluctance to lower prices in conformity with wholesale values, and that has resulted in failure to sell goods until still lower levels have been reached. More than one merchant has really lost heavily because he has failed to sense the wisdom of losing promptly during the past two years.

Willing to Face the Music

But this man is ready to face the music, to stand up and take his medicine. Therein is promise of betterment. Let him study everything. He must cut buying to the bone, be sure he gets his costs correct, get prices that really show a margin over expenses. Likely he is selling many items for less than conditions warrant, for less than he could get if he were to demand more.

One thing disturbs me a little. He says he charges freight every month to merchandise purchases. That is correct, but is freight charged directly against each item as it is received? Freight must be put into cost before a price is figured, or you get left by just that much.

I can suggest nothing else, though if my friend thinks of other things as a result of what I have written, I shall be glad to have him write further. Maybe we can unearth something beneficial after all.

Price Tickets are a Stimulus to Sales

Opinions of Merchants in Many Parts of the Dominion all Pay Testimony to the Valuable Aid of Price Tickets on Goods in Increasing Turnover—Only Half the Story is Told When Price Card is Omitted

A SHORT tome ago Canadian Grocer received a letter from a subscriber asking what was the general opinion among the trade in regard to the use of price tickets in store and window displays.

A questionnaire was sent out to subscribers across the Dominion. Ninety-five per cent. of the answers were in favor of using price tickets. The reasons for the use of price tickets as given by the various merchants are interesting. The following are a few of the replies:

F. Eld & Son, Halifax, N. S.—"We have a price ticket on nearly every article in the store, also a price list in the meat department showing the price of every cut of meat. We have proved to our own satisfaction that price tickets sell goods, not only in a cash and carry store but also in a store where an up-to-date delivery and other service is given. We use the newspapers for advertising each week. We follow market prices consistently, either up or down. Customers have got educated as to prices on account of so much competition in cash and carry stores, so that they look for price tickets wherever they buy. Window displays are very important and will invariably sell goods. We have taken our inventory and we are glad to say that last year was a successful one. The Canadian Grocer is a great help to us. We find within its pages much useful advice as well as many hints on market conditions. In fact we wou'd not be without it."

R. O'Leary & Son, Shippegan, N. B.—"Our opinion is that price tags displayed on articles in the windows sometimes increase sales while at other times they have the opposite result. People, nowadays, are all looking for bargains, and deal with the merchant from whom they can buy the cheapest. If you have goods on display at a bargain price, it is a good idea to use price tags, but if marked at regular retail prices it is poor business as your competitor may notice the tags and if anxious for business may display the same lines at a marked down price with the result that he will get all the trade on this special line or lines while he might never have thought of marking down those lines on display in a competitor's window."

Different Methods for Different Stores

R. H. Shaler, Compeer, Alta.—"I find that in different stores in different parts of the country, merchants have to use different methods. In this district I find we cannot let people have too many prices. Displays in the store certainly need price tickets. Window displays must have them to make the display of any value, but, to be most valuable they must be chanaged often. Unless this is done, a window display soon becomes stale and the value of it as a trade getter is lost."

Jno. A. McLean, Wyoming, Ont.—"I use clamp price tickets on shelving for showing prices of groceries. When making a special display in the window, I use show cards and price tickets. These I make with a good quality cardboard and brush. When making displays of vegetables, bananas, oranges, grape fruit and such goods that will probably sell in one or two days I use white cardboard and a very soft lead pencil. I find I can make very neat figures with such a pencil and it answers the purpose admirably.

"A merchant can soon prove to himself that price tickets sell goods if he will make a display of general groceries or fruit for one day without a card and then try it the next day with a price ticket."

J. Harkness, Vancouver, B. C.—"A window display without price tickets tells only half the story. While a well dressed window may attract attention, price tickets ensure an added interest. Pricing goods in the store whether special display or on the shelves is to the merchant an advantage for two reasons. First: if the price is a low one, he sells more and if the customer sees the price before purchasing, then there is no disappointment because of the price named."

B. J. Beach, Erskine, Alta.—"I am a great believer of goods being marked with a plain readable price ticket. I recently changed my system from credit to cash and to show my customers we were out to sell goods at the lowest possible price, I had price tickets placed on all shelving, showing the price of each article above it. It has been a great success and many of the customers have favorably commented upon the idea. They also know there are not two prices. If a merchant has confidence in the quality of the goods he is selling, what reason is there against placing a price ticket upon them? I can prove in many ways where a price ticket has been the means of doubling the sale. To those merchants who do not use price tickets I just want to say that a demonstration of them would soon change their minds."

MacLeod's Grocery, Brandon, Man.—"I use price tickets considerably. I find them a great trade stimulant, especially with new goods coming on the market and also for slow movers or stock I wish to clear out. When dressing my windows I make it a habit of placing price tickets on as many articles as possible and it certainly helps sales. I consider price tickets a splendid asset to any aggressive merchant."

Another man writes:

Do you consider the present a good time to start in the retail grocery business? Would you advise strictly cash and no delivery, or would a conservative credit business be more profitable? I have been studying the grocery business, but have practically no experience. Would you consider it better to buy a going store or start new? Generally speaking, on about what basis should a store be bought with reference to cost of goods?

How Old is Ann—How High is Up?

Any time is a good time to start a grocery store. There is no other business which is such a "continuous performance," as the grocery business. Also, any time is the worst time to start a grocery store, for disasters happen in it more continually and frequently than in any other line.

Strictly cash and carry is productive to many men to an extent that makes that system the one thing for those men. Conservative credit—and no grocery business should be conducted on a credit scheme that is other than conservative—is profitable for some men, so profitable that any other system would not do for them at all.

To buy a going business may be wise or unwise. I bought one once at a price I thought very low, but I soon learned that if I had got it free it would not have been a good buy. The location, which I had not studied carefully, made success impossible from the nature of things. A grocery store simply did not "belong" there.

That may not seem helpful or even gracious, yet I intend to be both helpful and considerate. The fact is, that success in business of any kind depends on the man. Nor is experience a desideratum. Men without experience succeed in this line constantly. Men with apparently ample experience fail daily. It is the man and not the method. It is the individual and not his training or lack of training that counts.

To the Trade:

Canadian dealers in food products have long felt the need of a line of Canned Meats and Pork and Beans of the highest standard of quality—a line which can be sold at prices that will really stir up more trade.

It is pretty hard to increase volume with imported goods at high prices. What is most needed:

(a) A new and complete Made-in-Canada line with selling prices that give your customer more value for her money.

(b) A new selling idea to accelerate increase of volume still further.

(c) An extensive vigorous and worth-while advertising campaign.

(d) Quality your customers can have confidence in.

These are the things you need in order to increase your sales, and every one of them has been accomplished by Victory Canned Products.

You will welcome a chat with our representative who will call upon you soon to explain our new selling plans in detail. It certainly will pay you to hold your orders till you know all about this new and better selling line.

Farmer Should Stay on Land

J. J. MORRISON, generally conceded to be "the man behind" in the United Farmers' movement in Ontario, must surely be convinced by this time that it does not pay to extend the Farmers' Co-operative movement to the opening and operation of retail stores. Mr. Morrison occupied a seat on the platform at the meeting in Toronto last week at which Aaron Sapiro, the California co-operative marketing wizard, spoke and which is reported in another part of this issue. Mr. Sapiro gave the impression that the farmer should "stay on the land" by perfecting his production and marketing problems without sailing into the unknown sea of retail merchandising.

Dealing with the question of co-operation of producers in various countries he pointed out that California has had a taste of the co-operative store system as it is operated by the co-operatives of England. The California producer tried it out and found it to be a failure. They are today reaping big successes by unity in producing quality products, grading them properly, by marketing them co-operatively and by extending the market for the particular products raised.

H. B. Clemes, the manager of the United Farmers' Co-operative Association of Ontario, gave similar views at the time of the annual meeting and intimated that the farmers should not have branched out into the realm of retail merchandising.

Mr. Sapiro's address was of special interest to the retail grocer because the grocer sells the goods of the producer. Every retailer should lend his sympathy and active co-operation to the development of the proper co-operative methods for marketing farm products. He will find that the producers of the district will prosper and his business will reflect that prosperity.

New Parliament in Session

CANADA'S new parliament is now sitting. The Speech from the Throne at the opening last week, forecasts an interesting session. Some changes in the tariff are likely to be made, and a conference with the railways on the subject of reducing freight rates is promised in the Governor-General's speech. Action on the part of the new government in this regard will be awaited with interest. A general clamor for lower freight charges is heard from one end of the country to the other, and any move in this direction will be watched with great interest by practically all classes of trade and industry.

It remains to be seen, of course, what steps the new parliament will take to raise much needed revenue to make up for curtailed receipts from sources which formerly provided the bulk of necessary funds. No taxation is favorable, but with the progress that has already been made, in the establishment of a Sales Tax and the elimination of Business Profits Tax, there should be little difficulty meeting the situation with a minimum of disturbance to business.

Taxation is not the only large question for the new parliament, however, for as the world settles down to business and as channels for world trade again become opened up Canada must take active steps to secure for her products a place in the foreign markets. Export trade has been described by one manufacturer as the "safety valve" of Canadian industry. It is the knowledge that there are other markets available to supplement the domestic trade, that enables manufacturers to conduct operations on a full time basis throughout the year irrespective of minor fluctuations of sentiment, and only on this basis can business develop with confidence and growing volume. This development of export connections calls for investigation and the providing of authoritative advice by governmental representatives on conditions in the world's markets and methods for securing a share of foreign trade.

It is, therefore, evident that the new parliament has multifarious problems of an involved nature on its hands. Retail merchants and other business men of Canada stand ready to lend counsel whenever required to assist in an intelligent solution of these problems, and it is hoped that their counsel will be taken advantage of before the machinery of business is thrown out of gear as has happened on previous occasions.

Editorials in Brief

TOP O' THE MORNIN' to yez—to-day is St. Patrick's Day—the 17th of March.

QUALITY GOODS will be remembered long after the price is forgotten.

COMPETITION is nothing to be afraid of but something to meet like a man.

"BUSINESS AS USUAL" is not enough these days; it must be "Business More Than Usual" or the merchant don't get by.

THERE IS scarcely a retail grocer who has not experienced something of the person who enters the store, and while waiting to be served, helps himself or herself to goods on display in open containers. In this connection an amusing story is told, with the joke altogether on the meddlesome party who could not refrain from helping himself. Soap chips in a certain grocery store looked so much like brown sugar, several people stopped and put a handful in their mouths. The more they expectorated, the worse the lather got, and the store staff who naturally dislike people who lunch off the displays of goods had a day of real sport.

THE RESOLUTIONS passed at the conference of egg producers, wholesale dealers and retailers in Ottawa last week did not all meet with the approval of the retailers present, and the announcement of the same since has occasioned some additional opposition on the part of retailers. As referred to in the first article in this issue, should these resolutions pass, it would be necessary for every grocer in the country handling cakes and biscuits in his store, to say nothing of other confectionery, to state that the same were made from imported eggs. As is pointed out, the resolution is impracticable and would work nothing but inconvenience and confusion on the dealer.

CURRENT NEWS OF THE WEEK

Canadian Grocer Will Appreciate Items of News From Readers for This Page

Maritimes

A new grocery store has opened in Clark's Harbor, Nova Scotia, under the management of Nickerson and Crowell.

Quebec

J. A. Hewson, proprietor of Hewson's Grocery, 371 St. Catherine St., West, was taken to the hospital this week for a minor operation. Mr. Hewson will be unable to take his place in his store for some weeks.

D. J. Byrne, manager of the Montreal office of the Leonard Fisheries, Co., Ltd., has been traveling in the United States during the past week, visiting some of the cities on the Atlantic seaboard. Mr. Byrne is expected back at his office on Friday of this week.

Those promoting the Pure Food Show which is to be held in Montreal during the first week of April have found that the floor space in the De Brule Building will not be large enough and have made arrangements for the use of the Mount Royal Arena on Mount Royal avenue.

Ontario

G. W. Walrond, Toronto, manager for Canada of Cerebos Limited, has left on a visit to his firm in England.

Daylight saving in Toronto commences this year on Sunday May 14. It will remain in force until Sunday, September 17.

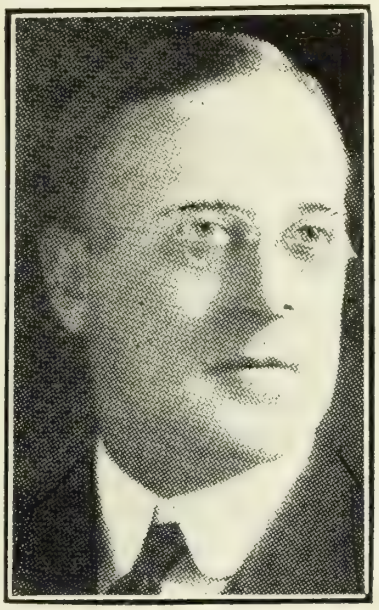
Dr. J. S. Goldbaum, of the Fels Co., Philadelphia, is in Toronto this week in connection with the business of his firm.

The grocery store of Thomas Sherry on King Street, Ingersoll, was badly damaged by fire and water the other day. The blaze started in a rear storeroom.

An early closing bylaw is being considered in the town of Elmira, and an effort is being made to have the stores there close at 6.15. It is reported that there is a good deal of opposition to the measure.

H. Harris who for the past three years has been representing in Toronto, Small's Limited and their successors, Consolidated Maple Incorporated, Montreal, has severed his connection with this firm.

The Macedonian bakery at Thorold, was totally wrecked the other night, when one or more sticks of dynamite were placed in the oven. The damage to the bakeshop amounts to over one thousand dollars. M. Stayanoff is the proprietor. This constitutes the sixth dynamite plot against bakeries and other places of business in the past two years.



GORDON M. McGREGOR
Vice-President, Treasurer and General Manager of the Ford Motor Company of Canada, who passed away in Montreal last week following an operation.

Features in Next Week's Issue

Grocers everywhere are inquiring for an easy method of computing expenses. As Henry Johnson, Jr., points out, maybe there is no easy way. Like charity, he says, this work begins at home. Regardless of what he may hear from outside, the retail grocer must know his own actual conditions. Henry Johnson, Jr., is going to discuss this question with the readers of Canadian Grocer in next week's issue. This issue will also make a feature of an article having a particular bearing on the tariff, as it relates to foodstuffs, giving information as to what foods are dutiable, and the percentage of duty levied on various products.

Another grocery that goes after increased sales in special "drives" on certain lines, featuring the same in advertisements, selling talks, etc., is the Powell store in Dundas, Ont. An article along this line will be found in next week's issue.

New Goods

New Shredded Cocoanut

W. G. Patrick & Co., Toronto, are putting out a shredded cocoanut in an attractive new "Patrico" package design. The colors used are blue, brown and black with white background. Their "Patrico Crusader" for March also appears in a new design, similar to that on the package.

* * * *

A New Adding Machine

The McCaskey Systems Limited of Galt, Ont., have added a new product to their list. It consists of a complete adding machine which in addition to the usual features, the manufacturers say, will segregate clerk or department sales, or both. It is put up in three different key board arrangements. Combined with it is a cash drawer which is also new making it a cash register. It will be ready by April 15.

* * * *

New Wire Clothes Line

The B. Greening Wire Co., Hamilton, Ont., are introducing to the grocery trade for the first time their wire clothes line. It is put up in 50 and 100 foot lengths.

* * * *

"Abrazo" a New Cleanser

American Steel Wool Co. of New York, is putting a new product on the market called "Abrazo." The manufacturers claim Abrazo will clean aluminum and will also remove grease stains, tarnish, rust, etc. It is put up in an attractive package and in each package is also a cake of Abrazo aluminum soap, made especially for use on aluminum and other cooking ware having a highly polished surface.

Letters to the Editor

Editor, Canadian Grocer:

Among "Letters to the Editor," in the Feb. 24 issue of Canadian Grocer appears one referring to the mailing of mail order catalogues.

The writer states that the postmaster at a certain rural centre received via express 700 copies of the catalogue of a certain mail order house to be mailed at his office for his patrons within 20 miles distance therefrom, and that the postmaster received fifty per cent. of the value of the postage stamps to be affixed to the same. As a matter of fact he received only one per cent. of the value of stamps sold. The postage on each catalogue of 21 ounces in weight for local delivery would be 6 cents at parcel post rates and the total postage would amount to $42.00 on the 700 copies. His total commission would be $4.20. This does not seem very exorbitant considering he handles each piece 3 times at least, or 2,100 handlings all told.

This privilege, designed to facilitate business of local merchants and others with neighbors within 20 miles distance could not very well be abrogated, without interfering also with the convenience of thousands of persons, including merchants and their patrons in all parts of Canada.

These catalogues cou'd be mailed as printed matter to any post office in Canada for eleven cents each, so the difference in cost, even in such cases as the one cited is not so great as stated.

The Post Office may be trusted to look sharply after all the revenue it can legally claim.

The Editor, Canadian Grocer:

We were very much surprised to read in your issue of last week that Crossed Fish Sardines had been reduced in price. We regret that you published this information without referring to ourselves, who, as you are aware, are the sole representatives of the Stavanger Preserving Company in Canada.

We wish to state that Crossed Fish brand has not been reduced in price and that with the heavy advance in the Norwegian Kroner and the fact that there are practically no stocks of this high quality Brisling left in Stavanger, there is no likelihood of any reduction until the new season's catch is ready to be shipped on this market.

We would appreciate very much if you would bring this matter to the attention of your readers.

Yours very truly,
W. G. Patrick & Co., Ltd.,

Toronto, March 15.

Editors Note.—The reduction on Crossed Fish sardines as announced in the market reports of last weeks' issue, was procured from a wholesale house. As W. G. Patrick & Co., Ltd., are the sole representatives in Canada for this brand of sardines, the price quoted is therefore a cut price and the list price of $15 per case still stands.

Maritime Farmers Have Co-operative Troubles

A report is current here that more than twenty of the thirty-two branches of the Maritime United Farmers Co-operative Limited will be faced with the alternative of closing up their stores or providing considerable additional capital to carry on as a result of the re-organization plan which was adopted at the annual meeting of the shareholders here recently. Not $70,000 as was reported at the time, but a total of $90,000 must be contributed by the branches to square up head offices' accounts, which is provided by the plan, and the exact number of branch stores which will be thereby crippled financially so that they will have to either close up or secure new capital is said to be twenty-two

DUPUIS FRERES, MONTREAL, HAVE BIRTHDAY PARTY

Dupuis Freres of Montreal celebrated the 54th anniversary of their store on Monday, March 13th. Messrs. Dupuis and Dugal received many congratulatory messages from prominent local business men who have watched the growth of the east-end departmental store. Tasteful decorations were arranged on both the exterior and interior of the building and a huge sign announcing, "The Birthday Party," reached across the front of the store and was draped with the flags of the Allies.

Western News

George Copeland representing C. & J. Jones, manufacturers' agents of Winnipeg, is on a business trip throughout the West.

Ernest A. Cuff, manufacturers' agent of North Bay and Fort William, was a recent visitor to the office of Canadian Grocer, Winnipeg.

George J. Cameron of the W. L. Mackenzie Co., Winnipeg, has returned from a business trip from Western Cities in Alberta and Saskatchewan and reports that trade has a more optimistic tone and conditions are brighter.

The Baker Food Products Company, of Chicago, are now selling their canned meats in B.C. Donaldson, Phillips Agencies, Vancouver, have the agency for this line for British Columbia and the Western Provinces. The Plymouth Milling Co., of Le Mars, Iowa, has also appointed this agency to represent them.

The Vancouver trade was saddened to learn of the recent death of H. A. Noakes on Sunday, March 5. Mr. Noakes, though formerly with the Victory Mills, Vancouver, has since been associated with Mr. Eccles in the brokerage firm of Noakes and Eccles, Vancouver.

S. G. Freeze, manufacturers' agent, Calgary, Alta., has discontinued his business and has gone to Vancouver to reside. This move was rendered necessary on account of illness in his family. Mr. Freeze has not yet decided what line of business he will enter there. A. D. Wallace for many years associated with Mr. Freeze has taken over several of Mr. Freeze's former agencies.

Not Ready For The Organization of District Branches

Vancouver, March 7.—George Hougham, Provincial Secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association, B. C. Board, stated to Canadian Grocer recently that the result of the two recent district conventions in Mission and Vernon had shown that the membership of the R. M. A. in these districts was not ready for he organization of district branches, the plan of which was a short time ago outlined in Canadian Grocer.

"The chief factor is finance," said the secretary. "The members do not feel that the extra expense can be borne at this time. There was, however, great good done by these conventions. The various merchants in the neighboring towns met together in their own district, probably for the first time, and got to know each other a whole lot better. One of the factors that militates most against co-operation among the various towns, and indeed cities, is the jealousy that exists in so many cases between neighboring, but not neighborly towns. While I am on this subject I would like to say that I wish every village and town in the Province had its Rotary, Kiwanis, Gyro or some such club. There has been nothing in my experience so productive of good feeling, and so deadly to narrow prejudice as these public spirited bodies."

Armand Chaput, a director and one of the managers of L. Chaput Fils, Ltd., wholesale grocers of Montreal, returned to his office on Monday morning after a three months trip to Europe.

Quick Turnover of Groceries is Need

Standardization and Concentration of Selling Energy in Grocery Trade Outlined at Course for Retailers—Accumulate Merchandise in Periods of Inflation but Dollars in Deflation Periods—In Difficult Times Dollars Must do More Work, Profit Percentages Should Not Be Increased

AT THE SERIES of lectures delivered in Winnipeg this week by authorities on various topics, many points of interest and value to retail merchants throughout Canada have been brought out. The representative of Canadian Grocer has summarized a number of the important points in the following report.

The consumer must not be asked to pay larger profits to the merchant and retailer just because the latter, through neglect to make his dollars work harder believes the only way for him to remain in business is to add to his percentage of profit, said H. P. Sheets, of Argos, Ind., secretary-treasurer of the National Retail Hardware Association, in the course of an address on "The Necessity of Quick Turnover in Business."

Mr. Sheets, with the aid of a chart showing the inflations and deflations in business for the last fifty years or so, showed how those periods occurred at regular intervals. Periods of inflation were always offset by periods of deflation. During the periods of inflation, merchandise should be accumulated, while during deflation periods, dollars should be accumulated. Buying and selling must be kept going, and at certain times and under given conditions the merchants must work harder themselves, and they must also make their dollars work harder, that is, they must attend to quicker and more often repeated turnovers.

It sometimes happens, said Mr. Sheets that a merchant, when things were not going just as he might wish, believes the only means by which he can remain in business is by making the consumer, his customers, pay an increased profit. There was no justification for such a course. The merchant's duty was to see that his dollars were made to work more, to increase his turnover.

Guides to Merchants

Many things must be considered and studied by the merchant if he wished to succeed in business. He must study the movement of his goods by keeping proper records, must avoid over-buying and duplicating his stocks, must not be influenced by friendship for a salesman into purchasing goods he did not require. The merchant should be in a position to know what he actually does require in the matter of stock, by a study of his community. Duplication of certain lines sometimes simply to prevent a competitor from getting hold of a line other than the one generally handled, must be avoided. Another cause of the difficulties certain merchants found themselves in was often the failure to standardize their lines and concentrate upon them.

Mr. Sheets dwelt particularly on the necessity of quick turnover, showing by actual figures how, the dollars would "do more work," by disposing of stock instead of holding it and adding to it when it was unnecessary. The present new conditions called for most careful merchandising, and it was lack of such care and attention to the details of business which caused the failure of so many. Sluggish dollars must be made into active dollars, concluded Mr. Sheets.

POINTERS FOR RETAILERS

Consumers should not be asked to pay larger profits, but retailer's dollars should be made to work harder in these times.

Should study movement of goods and keep proper records to prevent duplication and over-buying.

Failure to standardize lines and concentrate selling energy is a common difficulty.

Importance of store arrangement and advantage of a Spring clean-up and paint-up for all stores outlined.

Use of community halls, rest rooms, and other agencies to encourage common interests suggested as effective offset to mail order inroads.

Remodelling the Store

At the same session Robert C. Line, of Columbus, Mont., spoke on "Remodelling Your Store," pointing out the necessity of making the country store as attractive as possible in order to draw the necessary amount of business.

In dealing with the matter of remodelling stores, Mr. Line emphasized the importance of the attractive physical appearance of the country store. He fully explained, using a number of diagrams and drawings on the blackboard to illustrate his lecture, how the length, breadth and height of the front of a store, and the manner in which the exterior and approaches to the building were arranged, were outstanding features in attracting business. The proper lighting, not only of the showroom or principal room of the store, but also of the show windows and frontage of the store, was worthy of most serious consideration and attention of the country merchant. Attractive, not necessarily expensive, fixtures, showcases where goods can be displayed to proper advantage, should be erected in the store. The lecturer urged all storekeepers to "clean up and paint up" as often as possible to make their place of business look as "spick and span" as possible. Mr. Line dwelt to some extent upon the importance of the proper display of long profit goods and new goods, and also spoke of the necessity of attentive and careful service by either the owners or the staff of the store.

Advertising

What is advertising, how to advertise, what advertising does for the retail merchant, and how a proper advertising campaign should be conducted, were the principal subjects dealt with by Mr. Dunlop. Advertising, he said, was no more nor less than salesmanship. There were many ways to advertise, the billboard, the newspaper, the circular, the poster, the window display, the circular letter, the personal letter and by word of mouth. All advertising, said Mr. Dunlop, was intended to create good-will for the product of service advertised. He then dealt fairly fully with the various methods of advertising. To succeed in his advertising, the merchant must not only know his own goods, but must also know their manufacture and composition and their application to the needs of his customers. In his advertising copy he must tell a story which is closely linked with the customer's everyday life.

Mr. Dunlop went over the various phases which constitute good advertising. Any advertising must be conducted along a proper campaign basis, otherwise the merchant can never get his money's worth out of his advertising.

The writing of advertising copy was also fully explained by the lecturer, and in conclusion he explained the use and advantages of the Dealer Service Bulletin, of which copies were distributed to all those in the hall.

Community Hal's

Community halls and rest rooms, in the towns and villages of Canada, are a prime necessity, if the population and capital of the rural districts are to be built up instead of being retarded as at present, said Alex. Karr, of Fargo, N.D., an expert on community problems, in a brief talk to retail merchants.

Mail order houses are among the prime factors which are sending the small merchant to the wall, declared Mr.

WEEKLY GROCERY MARKET REPORTS

Statements from Buying Centres.

MARKETS AT A GLANCE

THE raw sugar market during the week under review continued firm with sales on Cubas ranging from 2 3-16c c. & f. to 2¼c c. & f. New York, the buying being fairly active at the latter figure for prompt and March shipment. Porto Ricos were also fairly active at 3.75c c. i. f. New York. Full duty sugars were quiet with small sales at 2 1-8c New York but the week closed with holders asking a higher price.

The demand from the United Kingdom was in evidence with business transpiring at 11s 10½d and 12s 6d c. i. f. U. K. ports. The latter quotation at prevailing exchange about 2.14c.

The cereal markets continue in a strong position with advances quoted on rolled oats, pot and pearl barley and cornmeal.

The tea markets continue with upward tendencies. Stocks in London are steadily growing smaller and it is estimated that with the increase in the consumption in the United Kingdom, that stocks in London on the first of June will not exceed a two months' supply, whereas the normal stock is usually around four months' requirements. The Indian market is closed for the season as practically the entire balance of the crop has been shipped to the London market. The spot situation is strong reflecting the condition in primary markets.

Canned tomatoes and peas are active with quotations more strongly held. Prunes and evaporated apples are moving freely with prices slightly advanced. The rice markets continue strong under advances in Southern primary markets. Nuts and syrups are steady and unchanged.

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, March 15.—The grocery market is, in general, steady, with every indication for a good Spring. The most striking point is that while there are a number of vantage points in buying, the lack of ready funds prevents much buying for the future. The sugar market holds steady with a stronger market for raws. Molasses and corn syrups are unchanged. A break has come in canned goods. It is evident that higher prices may be expected on canned vegetables while local wholesalers express a willingness to sacrifice on canned fruits in order to clear out present holdings. Evaporated apples are advanced and the prune market is stronger with evidence of an approaching advance. Raisins will likely be higher. The nut market is quiet without any change of note. Lemons are easier but oranges are higher with a poorer quality. A big demand for strawberries has meant a higher price, temporarily. There is a large variety of fresh vegetables on the market with a big demand and a higher price on some lines. Potatoes are easier, with some anxiety to unload Quebec grown holdings. Tomatoes are lower in price with improvement in quality and a big demand. Teas are strong with the likelihood of another advance. The coffee market is firm. Rolled oats are strong with an active market.

CANNED VEGETABLES STRONG

Montreal

CANNED GOODS— Canned vegetables are strong with every indication of an advance at the end of this week. The advance would have taken place at the beginning of the week had it not been that one or two local wholesalers preferred to hold present prices for a time. Dominion Canners have no more supplies to offer. On the other hand canned fruits are weak with many of the wholesalers anxious to unload and prices are easy.

NUT MARKET QUIET

Montreal.

NUTS—The nut market is quiet. Some local wholesalers have made changes in peanuts reducing roasted Jumbos from 15½c to 15c per lb. and advancing G. roasted peanuts from 10½c to 11c. This is practically the only change in the nut market which has only a fair demand for supplies to meet immediate requirements.

EVAPORATED APPLES HIGHER

Montreal.

DRIED FRUITS—The feature of the dried fruit market is the strength of prunes. In the past three weeks California prunes advanced 3c at the seaboard while local prices have not kept pace. It would indicate that in the near future prune prices will take a further jump. The demand as a result is good and the grocery trade is buying more heavily. Reports from primary markets on California raisins indicate that at least 5 months before the new crop is at hand, the old crop will be cleaned up. The market is strong with a quarter of a cent advance in primary quotations and good buying locally. Evaporated apples are advanced to 18c per lb.

TEA MARKET

Montreal.

TEA—Both Japan and black tea maintain their strength. In local markets the supply of Japans is running low, since importations last year were only one-third of normal and, despite the high prices, the demand has cut down supplies quickly. The London market for Indian teas is strong and inclined to be bullish with reports of buying, at a slight advance on present prices. Locally the market is unchanged but has a strong tone provement in buying over the past three months.

VEGETABLES IN DEMAND

Montreal

VEGETABLES—The Lenten demand for fresh vegetables, while good, has advanced prices on new produce. Carrots, lettuce, celery and fresh string beans are higher. Tomatoes are easier in price and of better quality than they have been for years at this time. Spanish onions continue to advance, now quoted at $12.50 a case. The potato market is unchanged, but some Quebec potatoes are being unloaded at $1.00 per bag.

ORANGES HIGHER

Montreal

FRUITS— Strawberry prices are higher with a better demand and larger supplies offered on the market. The warmer weather has turned the attention of the public to these fresh fruits and the demand is good. Apples are higher in price and local fruit dealers are forsaking the barrel for the hamper. Lemons are easier and while oranges are nominally unchanged in prices the quality is not what it should be at this season. The best grades of oranges are quoted at from $7.75 to $8, while the lower grades are selling at $6.50 a case.

SPICES ARE ACTIVE

Montreal.

SPICES—The primary spice market has been characterized as "active though only spottily." In spices, values are steady, because of scarcity and underproduction. No more is being brought into the country than is actually required. The pepper market is a little easier on account of pressure to sell. Available spot black peppers are scarce but local prices show no inclination to change.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, March 15.—Cereals continue to reflect the strong position in grains with advances on beans, rolled oats, wheat kernels, buckwheat flour, split peas and cornmeal. Strength in canned tomatoes and peas continues to be a feature in the canned goods market. Canned fruits are holding steady with supplies commencing to move freely. Lobster is showing signs of scarcity with some brands slightly advanced on half pound tins. Some sizes of prunes and evaporated apples are higher while currants are in a firmer position. There is no change in the local situation on nuts but markets abroad have a firmer tone. Teas continue with upward tendencies. Sugars and syrups are unchanged while spices are strongly held at unchanged quotations. Primary rice markets are firm with advances registered on Blue Rose. Oranges are higher but vegetables show little change.

STRONG BEAN MARKET

Toronto

BEANS.—The situation in beans is steadily gaining strength. Supplies of Ontario beans are becoming more difficult to procure. Some small lots are offered but it is generally considered that the bulk of the last crop is fairly well out of the producers hands. In some quarters the quotation on hand picked is advanced 25c per bushel, making the price $4.50. Others, however, continue to quote $4.25.

CANNED VEGETABLES FIRM

Toronto.

CANNED GOODS.—A strong market prevails in canned vegetables. Peas and tomatoes are showing signs of scarcity and there appears to be some "Shopping around" on the part of brokers to pick up supplies as canneries' stocks are fairly well cleaned up. The better grades of tomatoes are bringing $1.80 per doz. but some of the independent brands are offered at $1.70 per doz. Peas are in practically the same position as tomatoes with the smaller sizes practically cleaned up, the only grade now offered in any volume is the No. 4 sieve. Half pound lobster is inclined to be scarce with Eagle brand quoted at a firmer figure of $4.25 per doz. Delmonte asparagus tips, medium tins, is quoted at $2.40 per doz.

RISING TENDENCIES IN TEAS

Toronto.

TEAS.—Advices from primary markets continue to indicate rising tendencies. The Indian market is closed as the balance of the crop has been shipped to the London market. According to the annual report of an English tea firm the per capita consumption of tea in the United Kingdom has increased from 6.42 pounds in 1913 to 8.66 pounds in 1921. The rate of daily consumption in the United Kingdom for 1921 was 1,125,117 pounds. It is estimated that at this rate of home consumption and a continuation of a normal export demand, the bonded warehouse stocks in the United Kingdom will be reduced by the end of June to approximately two months supply. The normal supply in London in bonded warehouses is generally about four months' requirements. Any reduction in this regard can naturally be expected to result in stronger prices. In the local spot situation there is little change in quotations to the retail trade but importers state that many teas cannot be replaced at the figures quoted.

NEW MAPLE SYRUP OFFERED

Toronto.

SYRUPS.—The making of maple syrup has commenced in earnest and at the present time indications point to a fair output. Quotations on the Ontario product are not available, but some dealers are offering Quebec syrup to arrive at the end of the month at around $2.20 per gallon. Corn syrups and molasses are steady and unchanged.

HIGHER PRICES ON PRUNES

Winnipeg

DRIED FRUITS.—Prunes have advanced on the local market and the California market is decidedly stronger. Higher prices are expected and indications point to the fact that prunes will be practically cleaned up at the Coast before the first of July. Evaporated apples are getting into small compass and have shown an advance of ¾c per lb. Raisins of the seeded and seedless variety, especially of the better grades, are reported scarce.

STRONG SPICE MARKET

Winnipeg

SPICE.—The spice market remains unchanged and prices are firmly held. There is a strong undertone due to scarcity of supplies both on spot and in first hands, and also to rising costs in primary markets. Higher exchange is another important factor in the situation that is advancing the laid-down prices.

Vancouver, B. C., March 14.—California oranges are firm at $6.25 per case. Cabbage is quoted at 6c per lb.; head lettuce, $6 per crate; sweet potatoes, 7c per lb.; and rhubarb, 21c per lb. Royal Crown lye is reduced 30c per case. The bean market is stronger with quotations up 25c. A vessel from Australia arrived during the week containing 14,000 cases of onions, 6,000 carcasses of lamb and 5,000 cases of butter. This shipment has created an easy feeling on these commodities and lower prices are expected. The egg market is weaker with prices down to 30c per doz.

NEED FOR QUICK TURNOVER

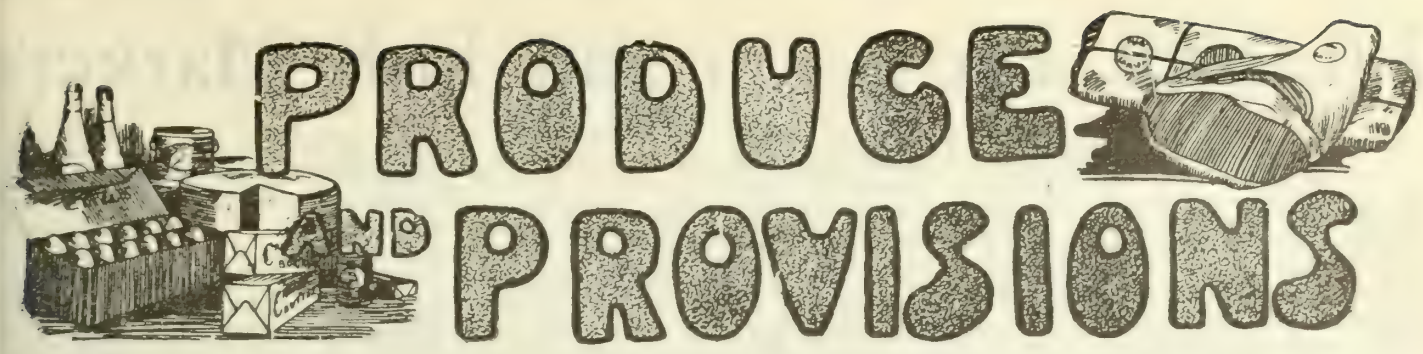
Karr. The only way to combat the inroads these establishments are making into the business of the retail merchant is co-operation between the town residents and the country residents, he added. Common opinions, common affections and common interests must exist. The mail order houses threaten to wipe the towns out of existence, declared Mr. Karr. Many carloads of mail order catalogues are distributed.

"Creative Business," was the subject discussed by J. M. Thompson, Winnipeg manager for Beatty Bros., manufacturers of pumps, washing machines, etc. Making comparisons between the manner in which the United States and Germany obtained their markets, Mr. Thompson pointed out that the former was hampered in reaching the markets of the world by its protective tariff while the German manufacturer had not this to contend with, but was aided by the government in reaching the consumer, inasmuch as he was favored by a reduced rate on the state owned railway, for exports, amounting to as much as one-third.

Merchant Must Initiate

There are two kinds of merchants Mr. Thompson said, one is the imitator and the other the initiator. The former only sells the goods he is asked for afraid to stock any other, while the latter introduces to the community new lines.

A creamery in Western Ontario was fined recently $25. and costs for selling a quantity of butter in Toronto which was from one-quarter to three-quarters of an ounce short on each pound.



Wholesomeness of Margarine is Proved

When One Considers The Pure and Highly Refined Ingredients That Are Used in Its Manufacture, Any Real Objection is at Once Eliminated—There Should Be Benefits to Farmers in Its Continued Use

WHEN a lady pointed out to Dr. Johnson a mis-definition of a word in his big dictionary and asked him why he had chosen it, he was candid in confession. "Ignorance, madam, sheer ignorance."

Much of the prejudice against margarine in Canada comes from the same cause, though it is rarely so frankly admitted.

A sincere objection commonly made to margarine as a food product is that it lacks wholesomeness. This doubt is removed when one understands the pure and highly-refined ingredients from which the article is made. From first to last the process of manufacture is under the supervision of government inspectors, whose sole business it is to see that wholesomeness and cleanliness are strictly preserved.

Ingredients of Oleomargarine

Margarine is made from oleo oil, neutral, vegetable oils, salt and milk. In the higher grades a percentage of the best creamery butter is added. Now oleo oil is pressed from the beef fats of government-inspected animals only. It cannot contain decayed or out-of-condition fats, for the inspectors must not approve fats that are not sweet, wholesome and from healthy stock. Neutral is a product made from the leaf lard of the pig, separated at temperatures that do not bring out the characteristic lard flavor and aroma. The vegetable oils used are peanut oil and cottonseed oil, refined to a salad quality and used in moderate proportions. The salt is the usual dairy salt. The milk product must be received absolutely sweet at the factories, where it is carefully and efficiently pasteurized.

The butter used is made from pasteurized cream and only supplied by creameries where the equipment and method of pasteurizing have been approved by the government. This analysis should amply satisfy Canadian housewives that oleomargarine is a wholesome food, easy to assimilate, having a high energy value, and containing the so-called growth elements of milk.

Growth Accessories

"Growth accessories" is the name given to three substances which have in recent years been found to be highly important parts of our daily foods, whose functions are known to be vital to growth, but which have not yet been fully studied. Perhaps the best known is the vitamine. At first these substances were thought to be found only in milk and butter, eggs and thin-leaved vegetables, but no research work has yet established the quantity of any one or any combination necessary to produce normal growth.

During the last few years much progress has been made in the study of "growth accessories" by Professors McCullum, Osborne and Mendel, and by W. D. Haliburton, an English research authority. The last-named has conclusively established the fact that growth elements are present in animal fats, including oleo oil, from which margarine is made. His work completely disproves the statement that margarine was not a wholesome food for growing children. Not only are the growth elements present in the oil itself, but this product in the process of manufacture is churned in milk.

If, as an English doctor recently said, there are millions of vitamines on a lettuce leaf, it seems foolish in face of the results found by Haliburton and others to contend that they are absent from oleomargarine. The advocates of margarine under no circumstances claim that the product should be sold as a variety of butter any more than the manufacturers of a plain worsted cloth would claim that it should be sold as silk. The two things are as separate and distinct as are lard and shortening. There can be no misrepresentation unless, of course, in such a way as to incur the charge of fraud that no decent businessman would countenance.

So far as the sale of margarine is concerned the main regulations are that no person shall use or cause to be used the words "butter," "creamery," "dairy," or the name of any breed of cattle on any form of advertising or description, or on any package containing oleomargarine. No person shall manufacture, import, sell, offer, expose or have in possession for sale, any margarine unless the word "oleo" is stamped on the surface of the margarine in capital block letters, of at least 1½ inches high, and of proportionate width.

Should Benefit Farmers

From the farmers' point of view also there are clear benefits in the development of an all-Canadian process of margarine manufacture. As made in the Dominion to-day it is composed of approximately 55 per cent of oleo oils. As there are about 600,000 cattle annually slaughtered at Canadian packing plants —from whose inspected products alone oleomargarine may be manufactured— each yielding an average of 11 lbs. of oleo oil, it will be seen that some 6,600,000 lbs. of oleo oil is producible in the Dominion. Some of this is exported as oil, but it is reasonable to suppose that if the manufacture of margarine in Canada were permanently permitted, capital would be more and more invested in local factories and our own supplies would replace very largely that which is now imported. Naturally the uncertainty of year to year extension of the permissive legislation has not favored capital investment.

The real basis of the manufacturers' desire for permanent legislation is that there are large quantities of edible animal fats produced in the Dominion which could be profitably made into palatable foods, to the encouragement of beef cattle producers who would benefit by the added demand for the edible fats from their animals.

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, March 15.—The feature of the produce market is the rapidly declining price on eggs. During the past week the price dropped five cents. Dealers are featuring eggs everywhere and it is possible that the increased demand, despite the bigger production, will cause a reaction. Butter is also weaker with a dull feeling in the trade. Hogs are on the decline with a drop of one dollar per hundred and an easy feeling in fresh meat, smoked hams and bacon. Cheese prices locally are unchanged but the export market is quiet. Lard is steady with some improvement in the demand. Despite the Lenten season and an improvement in demand, fish, in general, is easier in price on account of the milder weather and dealers are anxious to keep supplies moving. Poultry has benefited little by the Lenten season on account of the comparatively high prices. The market is however holding steady. Margarine is unchanged in price with a fair demand.

SLIGHT DROP IN BUTTER

Montreal.

BUTTER.—A weaker feeling characterizes the butter market with the trade quiet. During the past week the wholesale butter market has been disappointing, there being very little demand for supplies which is attributed to the fact that buyers in most cases have supplies on hand sufficient to carry them through the month. This has created an easier feeling and prices show a decline of from ½ to 1c. per lb. There is quite a supply of New Zealand butter on the local market which is a good grade and has been put up in 1 lb.prints.

CHEESE MARKET UNCHANGED

Montreal

CHEESE.—There has been no improvement in the movement of cheese for export accounts, owing to the fact that there is practically no demand from English importers. The stocks of Canadian cheese in the English market are comparatively light but this has been offset to some extent by large arrivals of New Zealand cheese. The local market is dull with prices unchanged.

ANOTHER DROP IN EGGS

Montreal.

EGGS.—The weakness which has characterized the egg market of late is again the principal feature of the trade and prices show a decline of from 5c. to 6c. during the past week with a 1c. drop early this week. The price now quoted is 31c. for new laid eggs and 35c. for extras. The production of eggs shows a marked increase, due to the early spring season and continued mild weather.

MARGARINE.—There is no change in the margarine market. Prices stand at from 22c. in prints to 21c. in bulk with some shading in these prices. The demand is light but steady in certain quarters.

SMOKED MEATS EASIER

Montreal.

SMOKED MEATS.—On account of the Lenten season buying of smoked meats has been somewhat curtailed and the trade is quiet. Coupled with this, Canadian cured meats found a weaker market in England and prices, following the hog market, have an easier tendency. Local prices are somewhat shaded early in the week and a decline is expected before the close of the week.

WEAKNESS IN HOG PRICES

Montreal

FRESH MEATS.—The weak feeling which was noted in the hog market last week is now more pronounced and is attributed to weaker cable advices on Canadian bacon. Prices quoted on select light weight; weighed off cars, locally are from $13.00 per cwt. to $13.50. This is a decline of $1.00 per cwt. The trade in fresh meats is dull owing to the Lenten season but prices are fairly steady. Trimmed loins of pork are quoted at 29c. per lb. and trimmed shoulders at 20c. per lb.

Montreal.

FRESH FISH.—Despite the Lenten season and a somewhat improved demand, fish prices are easier on account of the mild weather. Local dealers are anxious to clear out stocks on hand and in transit and are shading prices. Halibut is now quoted at from 17½c. to 18c. per lb., market cod is reduced to 5½c. per lb. and filets are quoted at 16c. per lb. The market shows some improvement in demand but through this week and next an easy trend to prices may be expected.

LIGHT CALL FOR POULTRY

Montreal

POULTRY.—High prices are held responsible for the falling off in the demand for poultry during the Lenten season. Despite this and the fact that there are fairly large stocks held in the freezers, prices are steady with sales of selected 8 to 12 lb. turkeys at 50c. per lb.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, March 15.—Another sharp reduction in hog prices features the produce and provision markets. The big packing plants are determined to reduce hog values claiming that prices are too high, chiefly on account of the lack of export business. The weakness in the hog market has also created a steadier feeling at the moment, on lard, shortening, cooked meats, bacon and hams. Butter remains steady to firm while eggs are quoted at a lower basis. Cheese is quiet and unchanged. First quotations are unchanged under an active demand. Heavy fowl is in fairly active demand with slightly higher prices, but otherwise the poultry market is dull.

BUTTER STEADY

Toronto.

BUTTER.—The market continues steady to firm with quotations on the better grades unchanged at 39c. to 40c. There appears to be considerable butter offered of a second grade nature which is bringing around 35c. per lb.

PORK CUTS DROP ONE CENT

Toronto

FRESH MEATS.—Further weakness was in evidence in the hog market during the week with quotations dropping another dollar. Two weeks ago, hogs on the fed and watered basis were bringing $14.50 per cwt. but with a determined effort on the part of the packers, prices dropped steadily and at the end of last week the lower price of $12.50 per cwt. was reached. Packers claim that prices are still too high and are endeavoring to further reduce values. In the cattle section, lower prices were in evidence as a result of heavier offerings. In dressed meats the only change in quotations is a reduction of one cent per pound on all pork cuts.

New Standards for Butter and Cheese Are Discussed

Ottawa, March 14.—"The dairy industry of Canada is face to face with keener competition than ever has been experienced. New Zealand, Africa, Denmark and other countries are succeeding in fitting their dairy products to meet the tastes of the consumers in the best market of the world—that of Britain. There is no use for the dairymen of Canada again recounting the good work done in the past. The future calls for new energies." These were the opening remarks made by J. A. Ruddick, Dairy Commissioner of Canada, in his address as chairman at the Dominion Dairy Conference, before the delegates gathered from all parts of Canada, who met last week in Ottawa to discuss the proposed regulations under the Dairy Produce Act, covering the grading of butter and cheese intended for export. It had been rumored that the regulations governing the manufacture and importation of oleomargarine would be discussed by the delegates, but the matter was not even mentioned.

Opinion differed as to the advisability of adopting new grading standards for butter and cheese. The majority of those who were in favor of the government's proposals were insistent in their demand that the grading be done in the factories.

P. W. McLagan, Montreal Produce Merchants' Association, expressing the opinion of the members, said that they did not want any Government grading done for them. There was plenty of room, he said, to educate the producers here, and he did not think it was conducive to good business to interfere with the grading that at present fits the different demands found in the export trade.

W. Newman, Eastern Ontario Dairyment's Association, made the pointed remark that there was only one way to build up an industry and that was by giving a square deal. The man who sold a number 2 cheese for a number 1 article lost more than he gained, by losing his name.

No less than forty cities in the United States are now giving retail selling courses in the public schools. These are being given under the direction of trained teachers, who are graduates of the four teachers' training schools, Carnegie, Prince, New York University and Cincinnati University.

How Much Need For Speculation In The Grocery Business?

This short message to the grocers of Canada will not attempt to answer directly the question written as a heading of this advertisement.

However, the following remarks may cause many alert grocers to consider the question as "food for thought."

Every grocer has his own opinion as to the business policy he should follow. Some are wise—some unwise. Otherwise there would be no failures. That must be admitted in view of Bradstreet's report that 30% of business failures during the past ten years were due to inefficiency.

The Grocer who buys unknown, or unadvertised, or poorly advertised goods, may or may not know it—but he is speculating. And these are days when no good business man can afford to speculate with the unknown.

The total absence of the element of speculation in connection with the sale of POSTUM CEREAL, INSTANT POSTUM, GRAPE-NUTS and POST TOASTIES make these four well-known and well advertised food products as safe a purchase in the grocery line as Government bonds in the financial field.

Year-'round advertising plus highest quality, guarantee quick and profitable turnover on every package of Postum, Grape-Nuts and Post Toasties.

ROSE BRAND

When Stores had No Street Numbers

Before street-numbers came into being, a merchant was known by the sign under which he traded. And even to-day, though there is a number over your door, people are apt to identify your store by a sign—because signs are so easily remembered. Wherever meats and farm produce are sold, the sign of the Rose is recognized as the means of distinguishing a high-quality product. Surely it is to your advantage to identify your store with a name so high in repute as Rose Brand—the name that has stood for many years as an assurance of the very highest quality and value.

Brunswick Brand Sea Foods

(Ready to Serve)

Why are they such fast sellers from coast to coast?

— Because these incomparable SEA FOODS, through their high standard quality, have won the confidence of Canadian women.
— Because their cost is low — they are cooked to perfection and their wholesome flavor and purity can be depended upon.
These are a few big reasons why the majority of aggressive grocers throughout Canada have found these fast profitable sea foods such worth-while sellers—why they feature them so often in their windows and on their counters.
If you've never experienced the extra profits and 100% satisfaction they bring it will pay you to ask your wholesaler for just a small trial order.

SHORTAGE OF GREEK CURRANTS

A New York importer of Greek Currants says: "The low priced New York stocks available since last December have been slowly consumed and are now becoming exhausted. Consequently the tendency is to elevate price to their replacement values. Recent cables from Greece quote cleaned Amalias in 50-pound boxes at 54s c. & f. New York. Stocks are estimated not to exceed the moderate amount of 30,000 tons. The demand that usually arises during the spring from the world markets and the fact that holders have been able to maintain prices unchanged for a period of over three months are encouraging in spite of the fact that the article was not in demand at all. Everything points to higher prices during Spring."

WE HAVE A MESSAGE FOR YOU

THE FOUNDATION POLICY UPON WHICH OUR BUSINESS RESTS IS

A FIRM'S RELIABILITY.

A FIRM'S EXPERIENCE.

A FIRM'S FINANCIAL RESOURCES

These three points are worthy of your consideration when you are placing your products in a manufacturers' agent's hands.

¶ These important points have been the policy on which OUR BUSINESS was founded, and it has proved satisfactory to many manufacturers. We say it and say it advisedly that there is no other firm in Western Canada that can serve your interests more advantageously than we can.

The House of Scott-Bathgate Co. Ltd.

Manufacturers and Packers will find in the House of Scott-Bathgate an organization fully equipped and capable in every way of producing results in a big way.

What we have done in the rich western provinces for such lines as Christie's Biscuits and Robertson's Confectionery we can do for your product providing it is a quality line. Our twelve detail men are all "live, experienced salesmen" who know the west thoroughly and they sell exclusively to the retail trade. Other members of our staff call exclusively on the wholesale trade. If you have a new product or an old one that you feel is not bringing you the results you think it should, get in touch with us. We gladly tell you what we can do for you and give you any information you desire about the western market.

To the Trade:

On this our 18th Anniversary we wish to take the opportunity of expressing our sincere appreciation to the Trade generally for the cordial support which they have accorded us during the past eighteen years.

We realize that without this support our business could not have grown to its present gratifying proportions.

While expressing our appreciation we wish to assure you that our aim in the future, as in the past, shall be to render efficient and reliable service at all times by which we hope to merit a continuance of your esteemed patronage.

REFRIGERATOR A NECESSITY

Without the perfect refrigeration that you get only in Eureka Refrigerators, the grocer or butcher or dairyman cannot get the most profit with the least trouble and worry from his business —particularly his "perishable foods" business.
But with a Eureka to look after your refrigeration for you, you can go through the summer with perfect satisfaction, greater sales and greater profit and less trouble.

ROBERTSON'S MARMALADES

Trancanada,
March 16th, 1922.

Dear Mr. Grocer:

I was in your store yesterday, and was very glad to see that you had got in some of Robertson's Marmalades. I had been getting Robertson's Marmalades from the corner Grocer, opposite you, but you know I have been dealing with you for years and am glad you have got Robertson's Marmalades in your store again. Please send me over a four pound tin to-day.

The Children like Robertson's Marmalades the best. It is good for them during the Spring months and they ask for Robertson's. I find there is no waste with Robertson's Marmalades. It is as easy to get the last spoonful out as the first and none of the Marmalade sticks to the side of the tin.

Robertson's Golden Shred and Scotch Marmalade are simply delicious.

I hope you will be having their new line of Orange Jelly. It is lovely goods and is a nice change and costs the same as Golden Shred Marmalade.

Yours truly,
HOUSEWIFE.

The Right Match
The Right Methods
The Right Price

WE KNEW we could please the public. Maple Leaf Matches are proving that. We need the dealer.

We measured the conditions that existed

EIGHTY PER CENT. of the consumer demand was for Nos. 4 and 5 matches—family size.

Of these the counts ran slightly over 400 and carried a FIVE CENT stamp. Others ran considerably less than 400 and carried a FOUR CENT stamp.

We asked the Trade

We learnt that, first, there was room for great improvement in the quality of matches and that the dealers wanted a superior quality, an honest count and a reasonable price.

Therefore, instead of packing practically 500 Maple Leaf quality under a 5c stamp, and charging for the additional stamps and matches, we are packing 400 of this superior quality of these longer, stronger, better matches under a 4c stamp, which gives the consumer more value in a box of matches than does the few added matches of "ordinary" quality under 5c stamps.

Quality is the First Thought with Match Users

There are "cheaper matches" sold dealers at "cheaper prices" which he sells at a cut, thereby making no extra profit but taking all added grief.

Gladly, we leave it all to you and suggest only that a match is meant to be a LIGHT, and every match in a MAPLE LEAF box is a positive light.

Buy through your Jobber.

CANADIAN GROCER

Vol. XXXVI. TORONTO, MARCH 24, 1922 No. 12

Asks Customs Protection for Retailer

Hand Basket and Suitcase Importer of Groceries Goes Unchecked at Border Points, Declares Merchant in Border Town—"Is Not the Retailer Entitled to Protection?" He Asks

By a Merchant in a Border Town

PERHAPS you are satisfied with what business you are doing, but do you realize that you could, o doubt, do at least 25 per cent. more usiness, if the hand basket and suit ase importer of groceries and other ttle things was checked up a little? Ve say just a little. No, we are wrong, ecause it used to be just a little, and ow a little thing has grown to be a ery big thing.

We have been making a study of this tuation for some time past, and have ought that it is rather a peculiar tuation that the retailer should be ig-ored in this way, when, so far as we now, they are entitled to this (Cus-oms) protection. Not only is the mer-ant being robbed of a business he is ntitled to, but the government is also eing deprived of a revenue it is en-tled to. If not in duties collected, then additional taxes paid by the mer-ants to the government on the in-reased business.

Think and Act

Think over the following—but don't ly think, action should be taken.

1st. Is the retail merchant entitled to he same customs protection as the anufacturer?

2nd. Did you ever stand at a point of try, at the busy time, and watch the ople get off the train or boat or bridge d see one after another go past the stoms officers with a smile and say roceries" and pass on? Groceries ems to be the by-word for many other ings, but why should the groceries the "by-word" and the grocer be e goat?

3rd. Are the customs officials in your wn a fine bunch of good fellows to e whole community, and is that their b, to be a good fellow, or are they pposed to protect the home merchant, holesaler and manufacturer?

4th. Can things be carried over to e States in this fashion?

5th. Should the wholesalers interest emselves in this matter or is it for e retailer to fight out?

How would you like to hear a conver-tion of this sort, and it is the truth?

"Don't you bring any of your things from .....?"

"Why no, I never bother."

"You could save a lot of money if you would. Why one Saturday we brought over $34.00 worth of groceries and meat in my machine."

"What did you buy so much for?"

"Oh! we were having a little party that week and then I bought quite a few things for Mrs. ..... also, and then, of course, my wife won't have to run over to ..... this week. I absolutely refuse to buy anything in ..... now especially since the exchange is nearly normal. Last winter when it was 15 and 18 per cent. why it was alright, but nothing doing now."

It so happened that the party with whom this patriotic citizen was talking was a very good customer of ours, so we have watched the outcome of this conversation and have noticed that this good customer is now carrying a suitcase and is buying very little groceries from us, never before doing this. This is just one example which we were fortunate or unfortunate to overhear.

Shall we get together and get our due?

Is it up to the grocer to do it alone?

Or, is it a matter of the butcher, grocer, drygoods merchant, shoe store and paint dealer?

Or, better still, is it a situation which should be handled by the retailers of the above lines together with the wholesalers?

Can the Canadian Grocer get these people together?

WHAT THE R. M. A. FINDS

Discussing this matter with W. C. Miller, Ontario secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association, he declared that the efforts of the association to eliminate this evil had been more or less hampered by lack of co-operation. Mr. Miller has communicated with the Minister of Trade and Commerce asking for more inspectors in the next few weeks, in view of the likelihood of increased buying on the American side during the Easter season.

However, Mr. Miller asserted that the association had found that very frequently some of the merchants' wives in border cities were some of the chief offenders in buying on the American side. He told of an instance where the wife of a member of parliament had been held up by one of the women inspectors, and subjected to an examination, resulting in her having to pay duty. A great "holler" was made by this member because of his wife's experience, and consequently some of the inspectors were taken off.

It was also pointed out that border city merchants very often get business from American people, which they thought evened up what went to the American side. In spite of the various contentious aspects that have worked against a satisfactory solution of the "evil," Mr. Miller stated that the association was making every effort to have it wiped out.

More Inspectors Not Needed

Commenting on the request that has been made for more inspectors, this merchant who has introduced the subject, declares that it is not more inspectors that are needed, but more care on their part. "We do not need more officers," he remarked. "It is the absolute neglect of the customs officers now on duty that permits so much buying on the other side. If these officers would do their duty, and people were made to pay the duty, there would perhaps be not so much buying done.

"Border merchants do get a nice business from the American people during the summer months, but we have been told time and time again that they had to pay duty on a pail of jam, etc. However, that is not the point, and if things keep on the way they are, it is going to ruin more than one merchant.

"We seriously hope that the retail merchants will get together on this question, and do something worth while in correcting what is a serious matter for them. The government is always trying to find a way to get more money and the merchant is the one, as well as the manufacturer, who has to pay."

Seldom is Salt Asked for by Brand

Some Merchants Say a Few Customers Mention Brand, Others Say None, But Generally Speaking, Practice is Rare—Almost Half Retailers Interviewed Stock But One Firm's Products—Majority of Others Buy and Sell Two Makes

HOW customers buy salt in retail stores makes an interesting subject. There are those who claim that when the housewife orders salt she always specifies the brand she wants. On the other hand, there are those who declare that salt is never purchased by brand, that simply a sack or a carton of salt is asked for.

The only way to get at the facts of the case is to interview the men who sell the salt.

Canadian Grocer recently got in touch with some 32 retail grocers in Ontario with a view to finding out how salt is actually bought and sold in the retail store. Information was secured from such centres as Barrie, Chatham, Dundas, Dunnville, Ottawa, Perth, Peterborough, Renfrew, Smiths Falls, Sturgeon Falls, etc. Summarizing these interviews it is seen that there are three brands on the market that constitute the bulk of the salt sales in the 32 stores. We might call these No. 1, 2 and 3.

Some 24 retailers handle No. 1 brand; about a dozen handle No. 2 brand; some 6 or 8 No. 3, and there two or three who handle a different brand from the above.

There are 8 that buy and sell brand No. 1 exclusively; three buy No. 2 brand exclusively, one No. 3 and one a fourth brand.

In most of the other instances the majority buy and sell salt made by two manufacturers. Only one or two handle three kinds.

In no instance do all customers of a merchant ask for salt by brand name. In some cases merchants say that no customer asks for it by brand, and in other cases some purchase it this way.

What Barrie Merchants Say

To go more into detail: In Barrie information was secured from three merchants. One sells two makes. He reports that some customers ask for salt by brand name. The second handles one firm's make exclusively and a different one from the above. All their customers are given this brand. They report that very seldom does a customer ask for salt by name. A third dealer in Barrie sells but one make and this is same as dealer No. 2. He states that none of his customers ask for salt by brand.

In Brigden, Ont., a merchant there sells but one brand. This again is different from the two exclusive brands handled by two of the Barrie merchants. This dealer says that none of his customers order by brand name and that none of them ever ask for any other line than the one he gives them.

A merchant in Burgessville says as follows: "My customers invariably ask for salt—no brand named." Usually he handles but one make although sometimes he will purchase a second.

Situation In Chatham

From information received from four merchants in Chatham, it is seen that all four sell the same brand. Two of them stock this line exclusively; the other two also sell two other lines. One of the latter says that brand No. 1 is his big seller, whereas the other states that brand No. 2 is what he sells most of.

One of the four states that some of his customers ask for salt by brand names; a second states that few ask for it in that way; a third that none ask for it by brand name; and the fourth, who is an exclusive dealer in one brand, says that his customers generally ask for that particular brand.

From a Combermore merchant comes the information he only sells one make of salt, and finds that only "sometimes" do customers ask for salt by brand name.

"Just Salt" Is Asked For

A Dorchester retailer sells most of his salt in 100 lb bags and in barrels and he buys in half car lots. He also sells some loose salt as well. He stocks only two brands—more of No. 2 than No. 1. "Just salt," he says is all his customers ask for and he supplies one brand or the other.

Some of the customers of a merchant interviewed in Dundas show a preference for one particular line. This is practically the only line this store handles, although occasionally they have sold a second make, but at present none of this is in stock.

A Dunnville merchant sells No. 1 and No. 3 brand. Sometimes he purchases No. 2. Customers seldom mention name of any brand when buying it. Another Dunnville merchant sells two kinds, one being a sack salt of one make, and the other a carton of another make. He says that if any customers show a preference for a particular brand they do not notice it.

Salt In The Capital City

Five Ottawa grocers give some interesting information. They all but one handle make No. 1. One of them is now selling his first case of No. 2, but up to the present has only handled the one brand. The second merchant sells only brand No. 1. The third does the same. The fourth sells an entirely different brand from any of the merchants above mentioned and sells this kind exclusively. The fifth merchant sells No. 1 and No. 3, but at present he is featuring the same brand as the merchant just above-mentioned, because of the fact that he claims it can be put into store 15 per cent. cheaper than any other. The whole five Ottawa merchants say that none of their customers show a preference for any particular brand. The fifth merchant adds that they scarcely ever specify the brand.

One or two merchants in Perth feature one make and state that very few customers show a preference for any brand although the free running salt in the cartons is sometimes asked for by brand name. The second Perth merchant stocks No. 1 and No. 2, with sales in the same order. Some customers ask for the former by its name.

Experiences of Peterborough Grocers

One of six Peterborough dealers stocks exclusively No. 3 make. Some customers ask for this line occasionally by name. The other Peterborough merchants handle various brands, some giving preference to one and some to another. Most of them state that a few customers will call for salt by name but that the majority do not show any preference. They leave this to the discretion of the merchant.

A Pembroke dealer stocks two lines, No. 1 and No. 2, but sells very little of No. 2. He says that customers as a rule do not show any preference. A Renfrew merchant stocks only one brand, No. 1. None of his customers, he says, buy by name. A Smiths Falls merchant stocks No. 2 and No. 3, whereas a competitor stocks No. 1 and sometimes No. 2. One says that some customers ask for salt by name whereas the other says "seldom."

A Sturgeon Falls dealer sells only No. 1. Very few customers show a preference. In fact this merchant says that "none of them order it by brand name."

The above investigation gives a close-up on how salt is bought by the customer and sold by the merchant in the retail store. It indicates the confidence customers place in their grocer, the majority purchasing without question the kind of salt the dealer stocks. It demonstrates the close contact between the dealer and his customers.

A Grocer Must Have Quick Turnovers

Quotes Special Prices on Some Lines to Attract Increased Business, But Every Article Must Show a Profit—Sells Eight Dozen Tins of Fruit in Three Days, and 125 Hams on a Saturday

"A GROCER has to have a quick turnover these days if he is going to make any money," remarked H. Lawson, manager of the Powell grocery store in Dundas, Ont., to a Canadian Grocer representative the other day. "He has to sell goods, and sell them all the time," he added. Discussing the point as to whether the merchant is wise, who quoted reduced or "cut" prices in order to get a greater volume, Mr. Lawson expressed the opinion that every line should show a profit, but he did believe in making prices of "leaders" sufficiently attractive to get business. "You simply have to have the volume," he reiterated, "if you are going to make the grocery business a success. The merchant must turn his stock over quickly. He cannot afford to keep goods lying on his shelves for an indefinite period.

"We turn our stock over fifteen times in the year. We watch our stock very closely, and see to it that we have no dead lines. We always take stock on the first of January, and then we take stock again on the first of April. Few merchants perhaps would follow a plan of stock-taking such as this, but we like to know how the business has gone in the first three months of the year. This period is usually the slowest. Trade is always more active in the Spring and Summer months, as it is also towards the end of the year. We find then that if we have made an increase in sales in the first quarter, we will be all right for the balance of the year. Maintaining sales in the first three months requires special effort, and must be accomplished through increased selling effort. Quick turnovers are essential."

Plans That Are Followed

Through advertising in the town paper and through circularizing the people as well, together with calling on the customers both at their homes, as well as on the telephone, the Powell store goes after increased business. "We send soliciting salesmen out every morning," Mr. Lawson stated, "and then there is a certain number of people we call on the telephone. Window and store displays are also features of this store's plan to increase sales. We get direct results from window displays, and showing goods on the counter with a little selling talk by way of suggestion to the customers, usually is productive of sales. We are not afraid of the competition of the 'chains,' and their presence in the town has not resulted adversely in our business.

15 Cases of Oranges a Week

"We sell on an average in this store 15 cases of oranges, including various sizes, during the course of a week." Near the front of the store, where it is bound to meet the eye of the customer as he or she comes in, is an arrangement of fruit bins for the display of citrus fruits. Mr. Lawson declares that this display is the means of selling a great many oranges for him, to say nothing of grapefruit and lemons. "We keep the bins well supplied at all times," he said, "and oranges are constantly before the people."

Taking certain lines, concentrating selling effort on the same, and thus increasing the turnover of the products, is not a new thing in the grocery trade, but the staff of the Powell store has been signally successful in this regard, according to reports of special "drives." Not long ago, Mr. Lawson told the Canadian Grocer representative, he bought a number of fresh picnic hams, at what he considered was a good price. He advertised them, and put them on sale for Saturday. He sold on this occasion one hundred and twenty-five hams, which he thought was very gratifying. Another time he sold ten dozens of brooms in two days. He purchased these brooms from a concern at an attractive figure for the entire lot, and everyone who came into the store or who gave an order to the Powell store in the two days were sold brooms.

Eight Dozen Tins in 3 Days

At the time when the Canadian Grocer representative was in the store, Mr. Lawson was displaying on the counter a brand of preserved plums of reputable quality. By merely suggesting a tin of these plums to the customers, he had sold eight dozen of them in three days. When the salesmen went out to solicit orders in the morning they took a sample can along with them. Mr. Lawson had bought eighteen dozen tins of these plums, and he counted on selling them all within the week. As an aid to their sale, Mr. Lawson had also opened a tin and placed the contents in a sealer on the counter, where everyone might see the quality of the product.

Mr. Lawson during the period of declining markets, brought down his prices in line with the lower quotations. In this connection, he instanced the case of a certain jelly powder. Immediately the wholesaler brought down his price, he did likewise. He had to take a loss on some of his supply, but the entire stock of approximately five gross was sold in less than a fortnight and on the whole he averaged 18 cents per dozen, profit. He did not advertise the line on this occasion, but made a window display of them, and the salesmen sold them when taking orders on their daily calls.

The Powell store gives its patrons a systematic service of delivery. Four waggons are used and all parts of the town are covered at regular intervals of the day. Business is largely done on a credit basis, and losses as a result represent only a minimum amount.

Business Ethics

By Rotarian W. G. Patrick, of the W. G. Patrick & Co., Ltd., Toronto.

PERHAPS a number of our readers will remember a few years ago, when we were having our Rotary meetings in the Carls Rite Hotel, our good Rotarian, Bert Trestrail, standing up to make a speech before his departure to join up with the American Forces. The reception he received was such that when he rose to make the speech he was quite overwhelmed, although he was able to say he was sorry, because he had such a good speech ready. In undertaking to write this article, I thought it would be a comparatively easy matter, but, like Bert Trestrail, I have become overwhelmed with the feeling that it is impossible for me to do justice to such a big subject. However, I will try to do the best that I can under the circumstances.

As Rotary is the "heart throb" of service for the benefit of humanity, an importer has to be the shock absorber between the buyer and the seller. The definition of an importer is—One who imports direct from countries of production or from fundamental markets of the world, either in raw products or the finished article, to his home country. That is to say, an importer, while representing his principals or agents in the country of production, when bringing forward shipments and selling at a definite laid down cost, has to be responsible to his buyer.

The Golden Rule, as mentioned in last week's article, is most applicable to the importer's business, and, if anything, a little more so.

(a) To be successful it is necessary to have the goodwill of your employees, let them feel that they are a part of the organization, and, if possible, let a feeling of enjoyment of their work be sus-

Canadian Tariff as Applied to Grocery Lines in General

THE TARIFF as applying to food products, groceries and grocery sundries, is given in detail on this and following pages. The Canadian Tariff on these various products is cited under three heads, namely, British Preferential, Intermediate and General Tariffs. The British Preferential tariff of course applies to commodities from British possessions. In this connection it might be stated that goods from the West Indies have a preference tariff of not less than 50 per cent. with the exception of tobaccos, cigars, cigarettes, spirituous or alcoholic liquors, and any other articles specified in Schedule A. of the West India trade agreement.

The Intermediate tariff applies to countries that have been the most favored in tariff matters by Canada. These include the Argentine Republic, Colombia, Denmark, France, and the French Colonies, Japan, Norway, Russia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland and Venezuela.

The General tariff applies to countries, where no special reduction is accorded and are not British possessions nor particularly favored nations as in the Intermediate tariff list.

Duty on Containers

When the weight of a tin container is not included in the weight for duty, the container then is subject to duty, provided it is capable of holding liquid. This, of course, is on goods subject to a specific rate of duty. In this case where containers are subject to duty, the British Preferential tariff is 15 per cent., the Intermediate tariff 22½ per cent. and the general tariff is 25 per cent. Barrels are subject to duty. For instance in the case of syrups and molasses, barrels are subject to a duty of 17½ per cent. under the British Preferential tariff, 22½ per cent. under the Intermediate tariff, and 25 per cent. under the General tariff.

Excise Tax on Sales

The excise tax on sales or as it is commonly known, the sales tax, is 2½ per cent. to the wholesaler who is importing for resale to the retail trade, but to the retailer importing direct or to the consumer, this sales tax is 4 per cent. The sales tax shall not apply to sales or importations of: bread, flour, and oatmeal, when in packages weighing not less than 8 pounds each; animals living; live poultry; meats and poultry; fresh milk, including buttermilk, butter cheese, oleomargarine, margarine, butterine, and other substitutes for butter, lard, lard compound and similar substances made from animal or vegetable stearine or oils; eggs, vegetables, fruits, grains and seeds in their natural state, hay, straw, hops, nursery stock, chicory, raw or green, bees, honey, sugar, molasses, other farm produce sold by the individual farmer of his own production, ice, fish and products thereof not canned or medicated, materials for the use solely in the manufacture of oleomargarine or any other substitute for butter or lard or for the production of cottolene.

How Canadians Line Up In The Different Industries

FROM THE standpoint of the manufacturer, the wholesaler and the retailer, the occupation of Canadians is an important and interesting subject. The greater proportion of the people are engaged in agricultural pursuit. Statistics show that 933,735 are engaged in farming or in branches of that industry. The next important industry is manufacturing which commands the attention of 491,342 people. Trade and merchandising is third in the list with 283,087 followers. The table shown herewith indicates something of the development of Canada, particularly when the order of importance of the different industries is noted. Combine the employees in the building trade, manufacturing and merchandising and there is a bigger total than that of the agricultural workers.

Industries in which Canadians are engaged and the number of workers in each are as follows:

Agricultural, 933,735; manufacturers, 491,324; trade and merchandising, 283,078; building trades, 246,201; transportation, 217,544; domestic and personal service, 214,012; professional, 120,616; civil and municipal government, 76,604; mining, 62,767; forestry, 42,914; fishing and hunting, 34,812, and pupils at schools and colleges, 1,873,611.

Turn the Light on Your Business

Editor of Canadian Grocer Addresses Gathering of Grocers in Sarnia, Ontario, on Some Phases of Present Day Methods of Doing Business—A Lively Discussion Follows

The town of Alliston has a population of 1,400. The stores are all situated on one street. The business section of this street is about a block and a half long. And it is not all stores at that. There are two garages and a couple of hotels. Hutchinson & Foster have a grocery store in one of the blocks. The trade of this store is just regular groceries and if I were to tell you the turnover of that store, some of you merchants here no doubt would smile and say you would starve to death on such small annual sales.

But let me tell you, gentlemen, that Hutchinson & Foster two years ago started a creamery on the profits of the grocery business. They were able to do this simply because they knew their accurate costs and instead of fooling themselves that they were making a profit, they were actually doing it.

Their records show what every invoice of goods cost to sell. And they are able to set a selling price that will give them a just and fair profit. I might say also that Hutchinson & Foster was one of the first stores I know of who were making an effort to convince their customers that prices were down considerably from the peak. You are all more or less familiar with the attitude of the public about a year ago, complaining that merchants were holding up the high prices when the wholesale prices had been reduced. Hutchinson & Foster didn't wait for their customers to complain, but when markets commenced to fall, they immediately followed. To convince their customers that they were doing so, they placed a large card showing the present price and the old. Mr. Hutchinson told me they naturally lost considerably money on the stock on hand, but they quickly turned it over and next lot was therefore bought at the lower basis.

Prices Do Not Always Count

I have tried to explain clearly the importance of knowing the accurate cost of operating a business by using the experience of other merchants that I have run across in calling upon them personally.

There is another side to the question of prices, and that is the selling side. Once you have decided what the selling price should be, the next thing is to sell that article. The first point in selling is to get the customer interested in that article. One method, of course, is price. Price, however, does not count with some people so we must think of some other method. Therefore, we decide that the soundest method to adopt in getting a customer's interest in our merchandise is to tell them something interesting about that particular article which we are endeavoring to sell. The quality may be a little better. There may be a novel way of serving it at the table or something else especially interesting pertaining to the article that would create a desire to take some of it home.

If it is a jar of jam you are offering, you could point out that the fruit is not boiled to a pulp, destroying the flavor, but it is cooked just sufficiently to bring out the natural flavor and the berries are retained whole. You could probably say that the price is a little higher than some other brands, but the value is there.

Have any of you merchants tried to sell a can of shrimps, other than just shrimps? Did you ever tell your customers that shrimps are delicious heated and creamed, and that served in that way poured in the centre of a platter, surrounded with tender green peas, that it makes a dish fit for the gods?

Do you sell lemons as just lemons? Or do you make your customer's mouth water for a lemon pie? Put the suggestion of a lemon pie in the mind of your customer and no doubt you will also sell a package of corn starch, a dozen eggs or something else that is needed to make that lemon pie.

Do I hear someone say that it takes too much time to sell that way? Of course it takes time. Anything that is worth while takes time, but you must bear in mind that every time you suggest the sale of one article you are also suggesting the sales of one or more other articles to go with it.

Every time you sell a package of macaroni you likewise sell other goods that are used in the preparation of a dish of macaroni.

When you sell a pound of cheese, do you suggest that you have just received a fresh shipment of biscuits? Or do you just say, it is a nice day and let it go at that?

Did you ever stop to consider the number of times a day you have told customers it is a nice day, or whatever the weather happened to be, when she was waiting for her change or wrapping up a parcel?

That took time, didn't it?

Why not change this a little and instead of saying so much about the weather, which she knows about anyway, tell her something interesting about a new line you have put in stock. You can tell it in such a way that she will not feel that you are pressing her to make a sale, but the first thing you know, she will be walking out with an extra parcel under her arm, with a smile on her face, well contented with her purchase.

Impressing the Customer

A short time ago, Beattie & Co., Stratford, found they had ten cases of apricots, which were not moving very fast. These apricots cost a fairly high price. The selling price must be sixty cents a pound to allow a profit. A box was opened and placed on the counter. The fruit was a good size, bright and clean. A few sales were made, but they were not going fast enough. Apparently the price of sixty cents was scaring the customers from buying. But Beattie did not want to cut the price to make them sell. He felt that he was justified in asking sixty cents, because that price represented his cost and a profit to himself. One day he took a half pound home, soaked them over night and had them cooked the next day. He then dumped them into a nice glass bowl, took them to the store, placed the bowl on the counter next to a freshly opened box of apricots, and commenced to tell his customers about them. He told them about how apricots would swell to double the size after soaking, and demonstrated his arguments by the bowl of cooked fruit. His selling talk was so convincing that apparently customers forgot all about the high price and in two weeks the entire ten cases were cleaned up.

George Werrett, Simcoe, Ont, endeavors to be the first in his town to introduce new lines of goods. For instance, a short time ago he put in a stock of new cake flour. He had a cake made from this and put it on the counter with a number of packages around it. By having customers taste the cake he was able to introduce this new line into practically all the homes of his regular customers. On a line of this character good customers seldom question the price as they are not familiar with the product, and do not know what the regular price of it should be. I have often heard retailers tell travelling salesmen introducing new lines, to get their firm to create a demand for them and then they would stock them. That, I think, is a big mistake. The retailer, who prides himself on being a real merchant, is continually watching for the new lines he knows he can sell. He is the first in his locality to introduce it to his customers. If this product has merit they tell their friends and so his store becomes headquarters for that particular product.

Make Them Pay the Duty

MERCHANTS in the border towns and cities on the Canadian side complain of the negligence of the customs inspectors, thus permitting people in these places to shop at their will in American cities. They bring their purchases back into their Canadian homes without any fear of being held up, or of having to pay the duty. A retailer in a certain Canadian town on the border, writing to Canadian Grocer, declares that groceries are bought to an alarming extent by people in this place, on the American side. The claim is made that if the inspectors at the points of entry, were more diligent in their efforts to check up these people, and make them pay the duty which rightfully they should, there would be more shopping at home.

It would seem that the only way for the merchants in these border municipalities to wipe out this unfair competition is to join forces in impressing upon the federal government the necessity of a more rigid adherence to their duties, on the part of customs inspectors. Merchants at these several points should take the matter up with their federal members, and enlist their co-operation in an endeavor to counteract the nuisance now complained of. An even more effective way would be for these border merchants to get together a strong and representative deputation to wait upon the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce at Ottawa. A strict inspection by all customs officials and a levying of the proper duties, according to the statement of retailers in these Canadian towns, would have the desired effect.

Oriental Immigration

THE WARM individual feeling against the Oriental flood that is fast swamping the white population on the coast, crystalized about a year ago in the organization of the Asiatic Exclusion League which demands the immediate stoppage of all Oriental immigration into Canada. The membership quickly mounted to 17,000 members but the whole association was too unwieldy to function effectively.

Among the matters that will be discussed at the next executive meeting of the R. M. A. B. C. Board will be the reorganization of this effort. It is proposed to consider the present league as a unit of seventeen thousand members and then to form a master league of this organization and all other organizations that wish to come in as organizations. Organized labor has already signified its willingness to enter as a body. Likewise the farmers, and it will be carried to every organized body, regardless of the nature of their object in organizing, be it commercial, social, fraternal, industrial, etc.

It is proposed that each member organization will contribute $50 per month, which will permit of the league sending organizers throughout the Dominion to awaken interest in the menace that influx of those who cannot assimilate with Canadians, really means. Then speakers will also be brought from California, which state, more than any other, knows what unimpeded Oriental immigration will ultimately mean.

As one of the officers said, "it is time that each organization wakes up to the fact that a mere 'resolution' needs to be backed by wholehearted support and real 'money'." The retailers are among the greatest sufferers on the coast by reason of the competition offered by the Oriental, whose low standard of living is slowly but surely dragging the white man down to Asiatic levels—or suffer complete eclipse as a merchant.

Which One will Survive?

WHEN THREE grocery stores, planned along the same lines, similar in interior and exterior appearance, with the same slogan, "Lower Prices" and all within two blocks of each other, start out to commandeer the grocery trade in one locality, something must happen. Just what the final outcome will be it is hard to say but for the present it has meant three exceedingly clean, well equipped and sanitary looking grocery stores. There is a striking resemblance to them all, even to the signs on the windows and the character of the window displays.

There are two results of this keen competition, as far as the grocery trade is concerned. One is good for the trade and the other is dangerous. It has certainly meant more earnestness in the grocery business in this section. Not only these three grocers, but others in the vicinity seem to have wakened up suddenly to the fact that the public appreciate clean well kept stores with good service.

From this competition, too, there is likely to be a dangerous result. Already some of the other grocers in the vicinity have felt it. The public stand by and smile while the grocers fight out their battle, which may result disastrously. One grocer two blocks away from the scene of the combat said to Canadian Grocer representative, "Things are pretty quiet with me. I wanted to change my business from a credit system to a cash plan this spring but these other fellows are 'cutting each other's throats.' The cash trade is going to the cash stores, while I have to hold to my credit system. There is a class of trade that cannot take advantage of low prices for cash and that is what I am getting. I couldn't enter the fight. It is crazy. It would soon ruin me, so I am just waiting till one or the other must quit."

It is possible that this grocery is right? Must one or the other of these fine looking stores, a credit to the grocery business, go because they are fighting each other? Surely there is some other ground on which competition may be fought besides on prices. There is and that cannot be too strongly emphasized—quality and service. There is no doubt that these three stores in question all have ample facilities, capable management and appreciative customers with which to carry on a healthy competition on the basis of quality and service, with prices that will not mean ruin to one or the other or to the other legitimate grocers.

The Much Taxed Match

THERE IS perhaps no article more taxed than the universally used match. There is an excise tax of one cent per hundred matches or fraction thereof, so that if a box contains between 400 or 500 matches, there is an excise tax to be paid by the consumer of 5 cents on the box, collected by the manufacturer from the wholesaler, from the retailer. Matches are usually put up three boxes to a package making a total of 15 cents on such a package to be passed along and borne eventually by the consumer. Therefore on one-third of the retailer's investment in matches, he realizes no profit whatever. This amounts to millions in a year for the coffers of the government.

In addition there is the sales tax the wholesaler must pay to the manufacturer of 1½ per cent., and another 1½ per cent. to be paid by the retailer to the wholesaler. This makes a total of 3 per cent. that the government also secures.

Detailed Expenses is Only Safe Way

Merchant Must Know His Own Actual Conditions, and Must be Careful to Put Down Everything in the Way of Expenses—Eternal Watchfulness is the Price of Success

By HENRY JOHNSON, Jr.

A MAN asks me for "an easy system" whereby the ordinary grocer may get at his expenses. Maybe it will appear that there is no easy way. If so, just that much will have been learned by my readers. But here goes for brass tacks.

Like charity, this work must begin at home, right in the grocer's own store. Regardless of what he may hear from outside, he must know his own actual conditions. The primary, fundamental, vital facts with which he must be intimately acquainted before he can hope to get started at anything else are the following:

Actual amount of business—that is, sales for any given period.

Actual expenditure for rent, wages, heat, light, power, insurance, taxes, deliveries if any made, advertising, wrapping paper, bags, twine, egg boxes, etc. office supplies and expense.

Repairs and replacement of equipment, depreciation on equipment, telephone, ice and cold storage, interest, losses from bad debts and other miscellaneous expenses.

Not only do all these expenditures belong in any grocer's calculations but, as he goes on digging into the facts of his business, he will realize that these are only the beginning of what he has to know and think of. So let us analyze these a bit.

Rent is what is paid to occupy the business premises. If he owns the building, this is determined by what he could rent it for to another.

Get in a Salary For The Boss

Wages must contain not only what is paid out to others in money, but a sum sufficient to cover all the proprietor's personal expenses for living and incidentals—all that the "old man" costs the business. Let nothing tempt you to sidestep this issue. Everywhere men are running along with no account on their books to cover their own cost to the business. Yet it must be apparent to them that what they spend out of the business to which they devote their whole time is expense to that business. If that is not expense, I have never had an explanation of what it can be called. If this is faced as expense, you accomplish two things: You know what you are doing, and, because you set a definite figure, you are apt to economize on expenditure to keep within that limit.

Delivery is a costly thing. Be sure you get into this account everything. Include not merely gas, oil and direct repairs, but get in all replacement charges—everything. No harm if you swell it a little, for this is a deceptive account.

"Don't do any advertising," you say? Put into this item not only money spent for newspaper space and circulars, but all donations, contributions and expensive service rendered the woman's club or the W. C. T. U. or Ladies Aid, for these things are contributed to promote good will or avoid ill will, hence are advertising. Get 'em all in.

Office supplies and expenses are often left out because you think that a pencil here and there, a few stamps and a little stationery "don't cut any ice." If you keep track for a while you may be surprised to find how much these items cost. Same with repairs and replacements on equipment.

Depreciation Must be Faced Squarely

Get all depreciation into your accounts. A counter may last fifty years. I have used counters for forty years which were more than twenty years old when purchased—and they were perfectly good. But scales, bins, bag holders, trucks, scoops, faucets and other tools depreciate so quickly, and such a large portion of them is lost, that the safe average is 10% a year.

When it comes to delivery equipment, the shrinkage is fully 20 per cent. annually. That is not excessive, but conservative. You want to play safe. Get these items in.

Don't imagine you can avoid the charge for interest. I have gone into that so often that I shall only say here that every dollar you use costs you exactly what you would have to pay for its use at the bank. Put it another way. It costs you exactly what you could get for it if you were to loan it on good security. Think that over and you will see it is so. Therefore, charge into your expense account either six or seven per cent. a year on your average capital, depending on the going rate in your locality.

Now, when you have gone over these items and listed each honestly, fully, without flinching or blinking any of the hard facts of your case, you are traveling on the only safe track, for you have begun to know where you are at. Now add liberally to "other miscellaneous expenses" all you can think of, not included above,—and then some—and you will be ready for your first big fact: The percentage of your expense in relation to your sales.

After you have added all these items together, covering a given period of, say, six months or a year, divide the total by your sales for that period and you will have your percentage of expense.

Having learned something of the average expenses of grocery stores, you will have your first mark to shoot at. For if you find that the average expense is, say, 16½ per cent. and yours is 19 per cent., you will have to inquire whether your expense is too high considering the kind of business you are doing. Simply because it is higher than the average, your cost may not be higher than it should be, but the presumption is strongly against it and you must seek diligently either to find how to reduce it or the justification of its altitude.

For example, the average expense shown in that bulletin is 16.5 per cent., with 13 per cent. stated as the figure attained by the more efficient stores. Yet there are many very prosperous stores which operate on 17 to 19 per cent. and even more.

Next you must analyze each factor of expense. Wages have long been considered as safe at between 8 per cent. and 10 per cent. and in this first tabulation you will find an average for all wages of 10 per cent. with a standard for the more efficient stores of apparently 6 per cent. It will be mighty instructive for you to find how closely your own wages—total, inclusive of your own, remember—approximates any of these standard figures.

Rent ranges from three-tenths per cent. to over four per cent. with an average of 1.3 per cent. The standard of the more efficient stores is down to eight-tenths per cent. But one of the most successful grocery stores I know of in the entire country has a rent expense of 2.2 per cent. So it is plain that one must know his own facts and figures before he can determine whether his business is in an unhealthy or healthy condition.

Eternal Watchfulness

A proverb, attributed to the Scotch, reads: "Eternal Vigilance is the Price of Liberty." Phil Armour paraphrased that to "Eternal vigilance is the price of This Thing"—meaning his packing business. However you read it, the idea is the soundest possible; for it is the man who is on the job always, mentally and physically, who reaps the reward of full success.

The work is endless. There is something new every day. As you study you will sense how things ramify into all kinds of by paths and how you must follow then continually. But the reward

CONDITIONS STILL UNSETTLED IN THE OLD LAND

A. Newsome, vice-president of Sutcliffe and Bingham, Ltd., manufacturers of Khovah products, has returned to Canada from England, where he spent the past five months, during which time he visited the company's plant and investigated the market in the Old Land. He found conditions over there still unsettled, wth a good deal of unemployment and dissatisfaction with the system of doles. The effects of the coal strike are still evident, and the prospect of engineers and machinists going out is not helping to improve matters. As far as his own business is concerned, Mr. Newsome reports an active demand in the Old Land for these products. He finds business on this side too, very good, and is particularly optimistic as far as trade in this country is concerned.

And if in all this I can help any of you, write and tell me. I am here for just that purpose.

NEW GOODS

The Pure Gold Manufacturing Co., of Toronto, Winnipeg and Halifax, have just brought out a new jelly package in an attractive color design which is to be standardized on some of their other products.

Letters to the Editor

Tax on Matches

Editor, Canadian Grocer:

Sir: Our attention has been called to the fact that the public are being consistently trimmed on matches in the country. Take for instance Eddy's Silent 5s, every one you ask about the number of matches in the box will tell you "500." There is an actual count of from 420 to 450 matches and the public not only suppose they get 500 matches but they pay the government 5c., i. e. 1c. per hundred on matches they never receive, or nearly 3c. excess paid to the government on one package. This not only applies on the 5s but on all other packages and very probably those of other manufacturers as well.

We think this matter should be looked into and we thought you were the proper people to take it up with the manufacturers.

The Spanish Mills Co.

Cutler, Ont.

Editor's Note.—In discussing this question with the manufacturers we are informed that when the silent 500s were put on the market it was with the idea of putting 500 matches in the box but owing to the difference in the size of the wood, it is impossible to always have a uniform number in the box. Sometimes there are 500 matches but the average count appears to be generally under. The manufacturers however do not claim there is an actual count of 500 matches, but the term 'Silent 500s" is used to designate the brand, much the same as tins of jam are described as "4s," and does not necessarily mean there are four pounds of jam in the tins.

In regard to the excise tax on matches the ruling reads that matches shall be taxed one cent per hundred or fraction thereof. So that in a box containing 450 matches the tax is five cents on each box and in the case of the pocket size—which contains about fifty matches—the tax is one cent on each box.

Tact and Humor Help

Editor, Canadian Grocer:

I came across this rather interesting correspondence so am forwarding it to you. A little tact and humor in business go a long way. These letters are said to have passed between a Leeds firm and a County Antrim manufacturing firm. They are as follows:—

Leeds, Eng. Jan. 1, 1922

Gentlemen:

What do you do when a firm owes a small sum of money—2s 8d for instance—and doesn't respond to bills, statements, letters? Do you just charge it off to profit and loss or do you spend another 2s 8d sending them more letters and bills?

The reason we are asking you is that you received from us on Aug. 22 one gross of buttons, and have postponed paying for same. Our first bill was rendered quite some time ago.

Of course we know your credit is, O.K., and that you are good for it, but that does not help us out, if you don't remit.

Won't you kindly attach your cheque, money order, or stamps to this letter, and send it back by return mail? Then you'll feel better, and so will we.

Thanking you, we are yours, etc.

Secretary

Co. Antrim, 2nd February

Secretary,——Ltd., Leeds.

Dear sir:

Received your letter of Jan. 1. In Ireland we are so busy asserting our nationality, inaugurating Sinn Fein, and Unionist Clubs, recruiting Special Police, attending conferences, inquests, making new States, setting up new Governments (we now have four) and deciding which we won't pay income tax to, cursing the Pope, and King William, and fulfilling other religious duties—in fact, doing everything but making money, that a small matter such as you mention in your letter is "invisible" to an Irishman of only ordinary mentality.

Your letter makes us ashamed of ourselves. You are losing your time in the button trade. Your style has a lure that would make your fortune in the legal profession. If ever you grow tired of writing letters, or even "fed up" with life generally, leave Leeds and buttons behind—come to Ireland, the only place in the whole wide world where men are "dying to live in."

We much regret overlooking your firm's statement, and "rise to the bait" by enclosing 3s, being amount due, plus a penance of 4d for our sins of omission.

We are feeling better already. Are you?

Yours, etc.

tained, rather than making it drudgery. If there is happiness and good feeling there will be good-will.

(b) Satisfaction. Have your staff satisfied in the position which they are occupying. A satisfied mind means better efficiency.

(c) Honor. Be honorable in all things; honesty is the best policy. If a mistake is made, do not hide it, but own up to it.

(d) Punctuality. Be punctual; punctuality is most important, as it avoids pressure and the keeping of others back

(e) Be neat and tidy in all things.

(f) Absence. Do not stay away from your work without sending word to the office. When detained at home and not seriously ill, think about your work and instruct whoever is doing duty for you.

An importer should have definite information of the countries which he imports from, covering conditions of production, labor, wages, inland transportation, methods of packing, also conditions governing shipping from the different ports. He should have a general idea of the methods of banking and be well posted in money values of each country. An importer should be posted on the meaning of different quotations and should be able to give his buyer full information. The importer should know the standing of his shippers and should not deal with those whose integrity is not of the highest.

Confidence between importer and shipper is absolutely necessary. The importer's duties are two-fold—to protect his shipper when markets are against the buyer, and to see that his buyer gets a square deal from his shipper.

In making sales the importer must tell the buyer the whole truth, not keeping back any later conditions that he may know about the market.

An importer should not criticize or compare his methods with his competitor, but should explain to the buyer fully all phases of the purchase, and let the buyer make his own comparison when necessary.

Be fair, be truthful, be honest, in information to your buyers. To put one over is bad business; it is becoming obsolete, help to make it a dead-letter. Be broad in your judgment, sincere, open and above board in your decisions.

Contracts. The buyer must honor his contract after accepting and signing same. Contracts must be plain and honest, without a joker or equivocations. In case of dispute, goods not equal to sample, not up to specifications, etc., arbitration should be made by a board of three, one member appointed by the shipper, one by the buyer and a referee, satisfactory to these two. All members of the arbitration to be members of the one craft or trade.

Difficulties will arise, and that is where Rotary will be able to come into its own. If each individual member representing every classification, by his service, his honesty, his fair dealing, will be a beacon in his community, Rotary will have accomplished for the betterment of the business world a result above all conception.

Present Conditions in Grocery Trade Call for Price Maintenance

James Harkness, Chairman of the Grocers' Section, B. C. Board, R.M.A., Declares That in 40 Years' Experience, He Has Never Witnessed Such Price Cutting

VICTORIA, B. C., March 17.—James Harkness, chairman of the grocers' section, B. C. Board, Retail Merchants' Association, and a merchant in Vancouver, recently addressed the grocers of this city on the subject of price cutting.

In the course of his remarks he expressed regret that the conditions existing in the grocery trade to-day should be such as to necessitate the demand for price maintenance. Never in his experience of over forty years, he said, has he known such chaotic conditions, such cutting of prices and such insane methods of doing business as have been, and still are, being practised in this province, and more particularly in this ctiy, Victoria, and in his own city, Vancouver. To itemize such is almost unnecessary. "What is the price of a certain bar of soap?" "28c." "You're dear, I can buy it for 20c." "What is the price of a 4 lb. tin of strawberry jam?" "$1.10." "Oh, I can buy it for 89c." The supposed best price on this strawberry jam, and I am not questioning it, is, on quantities of not less than 5 cases, $11.50 per doz., less 5 per cent. discount, plus 3 per cent. sales tax, which is 93¾c. net, thus a loss to the 89c. seller of 4¾c.

More Necessary in the Retail Trade

It is common knowledge to every grocer, continued Mr. Harkness, that on many lines the wholesalers are protected and penalized—and there have been penalizations—should they sell to the retailer below the fixed prices set by the manufacturers. If then the wholesaler has protection, surely it is no crime, or ought not to be, for the retailer to ask for and have granted the same protection. If necessary in the wholesale trade, how much more necessary is it in the retail trade because, whereas the wholesaler is credited with business knowledge, business ability and business acumen, the retail grocer has to contend with opposition from many who should never be in the trade and who if a standard of qualification was set up would fail miserably in their examination. Many such possess the idea that all that is necessary is to open a shop and in course of time customers will flock their way. Disappointed, they start to cut and slash prices with no profit to themselves and upsetting to their neighbors.

From the moral standpoint is our claim for price maintenance justifiable? asked Mr. Harkness. Are we seeking to secure something to which we are not entitled? The man of the street, through his Union, fixes the price of his labor and will permit none to accept employment at a lower basis than that set. Call the services of a doctor and his fee is so much. I call the services of a different doctor and his fee is the same. Are the two charges coincident? In a Court of law you will find for all services rendered in connection therewith a fixed or standard rate of charges. He who said, "Do unto others as you would that others should do unto you," which is accepted as the highest standard of moral law also said, "the laborer is worthy of his hire." To instance the purchasing of an article at 93¾c. and selling it at 89c. is to my mind sufficient warranty for answering the question in the affirmative and to say it is sound morally and, therefore, justifiable.

Captain Nobbs on Third Trip Around World

Capt. H. Gilbert Nobbs, foreign director, Holbrooks Limited, is in Canada at the present time from Australia on his way to England. He is spending a few days at the Company's offices and plant in Toronto.

Although Capt. Nobbs is totally blind, from being shot in the eyes on the battlefield in France, he travels alone, and is now completing his third trip around the world since the armistice. He makes his headquarters in Sydney, Australia, where the company have two plants and are extending these at the present time.

Dealing with trade conditions in Australia, Capt. Nobbs stated to Canadian Grocer in an interview that the grocery business there was in good position.

"Wages have been maintained," he said, "and people still have the money to buy. The depression began about 18 months ago by falling prices in many lines and curtailing of stocks, but the buying power of the working men continued and the pendulum soon began to swing back. There were no failures among wholesalers and few among retail grocers.

"This has tended to upset things somewhat for manufacturers as other states have made reductions and as some firms put the reduction into effect. There is an election fight going on now and this may serve to clear the air

"Sugar is still controlled by the government of Australia and continues high in price at £49 per English ton of 2,240 lbs. New Zealand had the same rate but recently they reduced the price and a drop is now expected in Australia.

"The price of sugar has a great influence on cost of many food products," he said, "but until labor goes down there cannot be much change in manufactured articles. The labor problem is one of the biggest with which we have to contend."

Capt. Nobbs sails for England next Wednesday on the Celtic from New York, and will start out from there on his fourth trip around the world in June. He will again visit Canada then, and will also go through the United States to San Francisco. When he gets back he will have travelled some 110,000 miles since the armistice was signed.

Western

G. C. Rae is now connected with the Western Grocers, Limited, at their branch office at Regina.

H. M. Perry, Toronto representative of Stroyan-Dunwoody Company, is on a business trip to Winnipeg.

Howard F. Rankin has joined the staff of the Western Grocers, Limited, Winnipeg, and is on a trip to the firm's branch at Yorkton, Sask.

H. P. Pennock & Company, manufacturers' agents, Winnipeg, are enjoying this year their 18th anniversary in business in Western Canada.

Gibson-Paterson, Ltd., have moved and are now located at 171 Market Avenue, Winnipeg, where they have a larger office and warehouse facilities.

The Inter-Colonial Agencies, Ltd., is the new name that has been adopted by Charles Foster and Percy Broadfoot, who bought out the George Holden, Ltd., agency business in Vancouver. While the company has been under the present management for many months, the name was not changed till recently.

WEEKLY GROCERY MARKET REPORTS

Statements from Buying Centres.

MARKETS AT A GLANCE

THE raw sugar market opened firm during the week. There appeared to be an easier tone in the middle of the week but the week closed with prices again advancing a shade making the price as we go to press 2 3-8c c. & f. New York as compared with last week's price of 2 1-4c c. & f. The market has been fairly active with heavy buying on Porto Rico and Philippine sugars at 3.86c to 3.92c.

The harvesting of the Cuban crop is progressing favorably with two additional centrals grinding making a total of 177 as compared with 189 last year and 188 in 1920. The movement of both old and new crop sugars has been heavy. During the past eight weeks Cuba shipped to all parts of the world 1,125,507 tons.

There is little change in Canadian refined as far as refiners lists are concerned, but there appears to be considerable irregularity in prices quoted by the wholesale trade.

The spot market for nuts continues quiet and unchanged, but statistically the situation is strong with a likelihood for future advances in view of the light stocks held in producing countries.

Canned vegetables maintain a strong tone with some advances on tomatoes and peas while fruits are also firmer in tone. The winter pack of sliced pineapple is practically cleaned up and there are indications for advances.

Cereals, both bulk and packages are firmly held with flour steady. Millfeeds continue scarce under an active demand.

Prunes are becoming rapidly cleaned up at the Coast with prices showing a steady upward tendency. A heavy movement of prunes for consumption is noted and in consequence the spot market is reflecting the stronger condition in primary markets. Evaporated apples are a shade higher while raisins and currants hold a firmer position.

The tea markets throughout have a decidedly strong tone with prices continuing in an upward direction.

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, March 22.—The grocery market continues to show more activity with better buying in anticipation of a good Spring season. Prices in general are firm with a strong tone and more confidence in the market is evident. Molasses and corn syrups are unchanged and local wholesalers are ordering molasses for May delivery at a price that would not indicate a drop. Canned vegetables are strengthening with advances in tomatoes and corn that are likely to be permanent. Canned fruits are easy on account of an eagerness on the part of wholesalers to unload. Many new fresh vegetables feature the market with some strikingly high prices. New Bermuda potatoes are quoted at $22 per barrel. Fresh tomatoes are easier in price. Strawberries are advancing but oranges are a little easier. Spys are advanced again. Prunes are stronger and look as though another advance is due. Evaporated apples are advancing and since the small supplies available are held by one organization, the price may be expected to jump quickly. The nut market is quiet but walnuts and almonds are firming up.

CANNED VEGETABLES HIGHER

Montreal.

CANNED GOODS—Canned vegetables show a stronger tone and price cutting has been discontinued. Canned tomatoes 2½'s are advanced $1.80 while Simcoe brand is advanced to $1.75 per doz. Simcoe brand 2's are advanced to $1.40. Lynn Valley tomato soup, 1½'s are advanced to 90c per doz. and 2's are advanced to $1.20 per doz. Libby's tomato catchup in 12 oz. glass is advanced to $2.65 per doz. Corn and tomatoes are particularly strong and it is claimed only one factor outside of the Dominion Canners carrying a stock and this stock is not very large. A general advance in canned vegetables may be expected in the near future in view of the present conditions of stocks. On the other hand canned fruits are weak. Local wholesalers are making special prices on some lines of canned fruits in order to move supplies since some of the stock has been carried over for two seasons. The buying of canned fruits has been particularly dull this season. Sun Kist brand 21½'s large white asparagus is higher at $5.25, an advance of 15c per doz.

COFFEE PRICES STEADY

Montreal

COFFEE—There are no new developments in the coffee market. Primary markets continue with a strong tone but no change is evident in the local situation and prices may be expected to hold firm for the present at least.

CEREAL MARKET FIRM

CEREALS—There is no change in the cereal market. Prices are fully maintained with a fair demand and a strong market for grain as a backing.

PRUNES ADVANCE HALF CENT

Montreal

DRIED FRUITS—The feature of the dried fruit market is the advance in price of prunes. California prunes 90 100's have been advanced to 12½c. During the past three weeks California prunes have been advanced 3c at the coast which is comparatively a bigger advance than has occurred in wholesale markets. Evaporated apples are advancing rapidly and it is expected that the wholesale price will soon reach 20c. Supplies are low and are controlled by one organization. Sultana raisins are strong and reports state that there is not more than 2,000 tons left in Smyrna and the new crop will not be on the market till September. Currants show more strength in New York but local markets are unchanged.

STRONGER TONE TO RICE

Montreal

RICE—The rough rice market continues strong and active with mills showing no inclination to stop buying and every time a lot is put up by an individual farmer or by the Growers' Association the mills are eager bidders and even a better price than previously paid. Market for clean rice continues strong and active and notwithstanding the fact that there has been an advance of approximately one cent per pound during the past two weeks due to the recent heavy export demand and some improvement in domestic market. Local wholesale prices, however, have not changed and some development may be expected as a result of the strong tendency in primary markets. It is estimated that in Kansas, Texas and Louisiana there is about 3/10th of the old crop yet to be marketed, but no difficulty is anticipated in moving the remainder of the supply before the new rice comes to the market. A large part of the remaining rice is out of the hands of the farmers. Honduras grades are almost entirely off the market and when a fancy lot is offered it demands a premium.

MOLASSES LIKELY TO HOLD

Montreal.

MOLASSES—The molasses prices hold firm and may be expected to remain so until at least early in May. Some local wholesalers have made purchases for the first shipment in May at a price equal to the value of stocks now on hand. This would indicate that the prices for the early summer will be the same as are now quoted. There are no changes in corn syrup, the market holding steady with a fair demand.

TEA MAINTAINS STRENGTH

Montreal.

TEA—The primary tea markets continue to show strength with some influence on local markets but prices remain unchanged. An advance in black teas would not be surprising in view of the higher prices recently paid by buyers in London. The movement of tea locally shows improvement with the stronger market but there is an absence of any approach to speculation on account of money conditions.

NEW POTATOES ON MARKET

Montreal.

VEGETABLES—With the coming of spring a number of new vegetables are featured on the market. New potatoes from Bermuda are offered at $22 per barrel. Green peas are quoted at $16 and $17 per basket of 25 lbs. Montreal potatoes continue easy. Fancy and choice tomatoes are a little easier in price with a big demand. New beets and carrots are unchanged. Cabbages are a little easier and cauliflower are quoted at $3.50 and $4 per crate. The demand for fresh vegetables through Lent has been heavy and supplies good.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, March 22.—Business in wholesale circles is reported showing a better tone although sales for the most part continue in small quantities to suit immediate requirements. There appears to be considerable price cutting among the wholesale trade, particularly on sugar which is offered at quite a reduction from the refiners' lists. Ontario beans are rapidly becoming cleaned up, with fewer offerings from producers. Sockeye salmon, halves, has recently shown more activity with the result that many wholesalers' stocks are fast dwindling. Canned tomatoes and peas continue strong and a feature in the canned goods line. Prunes are moving freely at higher values. Evaporated apples are quoted a shade higher while currants and raisins are unchanged. The market on spot for shelled nuts shows little change but statistically the situation looks decidedly strong on account of the small stocks held in producing countries. Teas are holding strong with further evidence for higher prices. White sago is higher while rices are steady on spot but strong at primary points. Potatoes are easy and lower in price while apples are bringing advanced prices.

BEANS GETTING SCARCE

Toronto

BEANS—Ontario beans are rapidly becoming cleaned up. Few hand picked are offered while the offerings by producers of any grade are getting fewer. The demand has been brisk and many wholesalers who a week ago had considerable supplies of hand picked have none to offer this week. No. 1 lb. pickers are stronger at $3.85 to $4 per bushel. California limas are in practically the same position with quotations firm at 10½c to 11c per lb.

SOCKEYE SALMON ACTIVE

Toronto.

CANNED GOODS—A few months ago there appeared to be a plentiful supply of sockeye salmon halves and most of the interest was centered on pounds with the result that pound tins were fairly well cleaned up shortly after the new goods arrived. Recently a great deal of interest has been taken in halves, with the result that many wholesalers stocks are fast becoming depleted. A steadily growing strength prevails in the market for canned tomatoes and peas and although quotations are unchanged there is a lot of talk heard on the street about higher prices later on. And there appears to be reason for this when it is taken into consideration, the small packs of last season and light carry over from the previous season.

ROLLED OATS IRREGULAR

Toronto

CEREALS—The market is ruling strong. Rolled oats are firmly held by the larger millers but there appears to be some price cutting by some of the smaller mills. Wholesalers, too, are inclined to shade prices. In single bag lots, rolled oats are quoted from $3.15 to $3.25 per 90 lb. bag.

ACTIVITY IN PRUNES

Toronto

DRIED FRUITS—Prunes continue to be an active feature in the dried fruit market. The movement into consumption has been heavy. In some quarters certain sizes are again advanced while the coast situation continues strong with stocks rapidly moving from first hands. Evaporated apples are also in a stronger position with another advance of ½c per lb., making the price in 50 lb. boxes 18½c and in 25s, 19c per lb. There is little change in other dried fruits.

PACKAGE GOODS—There is a steady tone to package cereals with quotations unchanged. Dominion macaroni is offered at 95c per case of 24-8 oz. packages.

GOOD MOVEMENT IN HONEY

Toronto

HONEY—Supplies of honey are steadily becoming cleaned up. The demand this season has been exceptionally good and while no one appeared to be heavy buyers at any time, supplies have been steadily moving into consumption and the opinion is now expressed that the market will be fairly bare by the time the new crop is available. Quotations are unchanged.

NUT FUTURE LOOKS STRONG

Toronto

NUTS—The shelled walnut market on spot indicates little change and there does not appear to be a heavy movement. Statistically the situation looks decidedly strong. The recent declines were more in the nature of a liquidation of distressed stocks and does not indicate the true condition of the market in producing countries. Recent advices from China state that practically all supplies of Manchurian shelled walnuts have been shipped from that country while in France the supply of Bordeaux nuts does not exceed 40,000 cases. An amount which does not total one third of the requirements for the U. S. alone. Spanish peanuts are also in a strong position and higher prices are anticipated.

CUTTING IN SUGAR

Toronto.

SUGAR—Refiners list prices are unchanged but there appears to be considerable price cutting among the wholesale trade. The list price continues at $7.24 Toronto basis but in some quarters prices are as low as $6.80.

MAPLE SYRUP SEASON OPENS

Toronto.

SYRUPS—The maple syrup season in Western Ontario is in full swing and reports indicate the run to be considerable. In the Province of Quebec it is estimated that between 55,000 and 60,000 farmers are tapping trees. The market at present is comparatively bare and the price on the new crop is expected to open at around $2.25 per gal. During last season the total production of maple sugar in the Dominion was 30,000,000 pounds while Quebec alone produced 21,000,000 pounds. Corn syrups continue to rule steady at unchanged quotations.

NO CHANGE IN SPICES

Toronto.

SPICES—Quotations are unchanged with the market generally holding firm to strong.

SAGO HIGHER

Toronto.

RICES—White sago is advanced in some quarters to 8c per lb. in bag lots and 8½c in smaller lots. Some wholesalers, however, continue to quote at 7c per lb. Broken Honduras rice is offered at a lower price of $5 per bag and 5½c per lb. in small lots.

ONTARIO APPLES HIGHER

Toronto.

FRUITS—Navel oranges are holding firm at $6 to $6.75 per case. Messina bitter oranges are slightly lower at $4 per case. Messina lemons are also lower at $4.50 per case with California quoted at $5.50. Pineapples are moving freely at $8 to $9 per crate. Barrel apples of good quality are bringing a higher price. Some small lots of No. 1 spys are bringing as high as $15 per barrel with Baldwins at $10.

POTATO MARKET EASIER

Toronto.

VEGETABLES—The potato market further weakened during the week with quotations on track for Ontario stock around 90c, car lots. Dealers quotations to the retail trade is lower at $1.10 to $1.25 per bag. The demand is slow and there appears to be more potatoes arriving than the market can absorb. California iceberg head lettuce is higher at $7 per case, while Florida celery is lower at $5 to at $5.25 per case. Florida tomatoes, bkt. crates, are quoted at $4.50 to $5.50 with Mexican lugs at $4.50.

MANITOBA MARKETS

WINNIPEG, March 22.—With Spring about two weeks in advance of previous seasons more confidence is being shown by both wholesalers and retailers. Firms are buying in heavier quantities and a decided improvement in consumer demand is anticipated. Canned goods are ruling firm and canned fruits are reported in small compass. The coffee market continues steady. Dried fruits are showing gradually advancing tendencies. Beans are reported scarce and higher prices are expected. The raw sugar market is showing a firmer tone with no change in refined. Rice, teas and spices are maintaining a firm tone. Imported radishes, cucumbers and celery are in good demand. There is little change in fruit quotations.

CANNED GOODS IN DEMAND

Winnipeg

CANNED GOODS—Eastern canners report that canned fruits are in small compass and many lines are exhausted. The demand for California fruits, more especially peaches is showing a decided improvement. Canned vegetables are in good demand and higher prices will prevail before the new pack is ready. Opening prices on California canned asparagus of the 1922 season have been named and quotations show very little variation over the 1921 opening prices. The salmon market is ruling steady under a good demand for all grades.

DRIED FRUITS HOLD STRONG

Winnipeg.

DRIED FRUITS—The dried fruit market continues as in the past few weeks, firm and with gradually advancing quotations. The market is active for the quantities available. Prunes are quoted a little more firmly by holders and as new shipments arrive on the local market higher prices will prevail. Raisins are showing greater strength on the primary market and with limited supplies from local wholesalers advances are expected before the new crop arrives on the market. Currants are showing a firmer tone and reports from Greece state that Amalias and Patras packs are held with more confidence and are not so freely offered.

SPICES.—On account of the limited spot stocks and higher values in primary markets practically all quotations on spices are firmly held. Gingers are much firmer as well as black pepper.

TEA MARKET STEADY

Winnipeg

TEA.—Cable advices received state that the market is firm with upward tendencies on all grades of tea. Local conditions remain unchanged and it is expected that prices on package teas will not be advanced for some time.

RADISHES ARRIVE

Winnipeg.

VEGETABLES.—The first shipment of imported radishes has arrived on the market and are quoted at $1.75 per dozen. bunches. Cucumber are arriving in large quantities and are quoted from $4 to $4.75. Florida celery at $7 per case is in good demand. The last car of California celery is rolling and is offered at $9 per case. Texas tomatoes are in good demand at $5.50 per case.

BANANAS SLIGHTLY EASIER

Winnipeg.

FRUITS.—A slight reduction in the price of bananas is announced making the new price 9c per lb. The apple market advanced considerably with many varieties finished. Strawberries are expected in a few days.

TURN THE LIGHT ON YOUR BUSINESS

About a month ago I was in Guelph visiting with the retail trade. In the store of Hood & Benallick I found them making a special drive on canned peaches. One of the windows was trimmed with them, but other than that, from the outside of the store, there was no indication that canned peaches were being concentrated upon. Inside the store, however, it was a different story. A can had been opened, the contents placed in a jar and customers were invited to taste. This little bit of by-play resulted in sales running to twenty cases in the three weeks to the time I was there.

Jackson Bros., also in Guelph, made a special drive on shelled walnuts just the week-end previous to my visit. Mr. Jackson showed me his invoice for ten cases bought at forty-three cents a pound. He showed me the balance left after making a drive on them during the preceding Friday and Saturday. The balance was just two full cases and a part of one which he was selling out of. He advertised these nuts at sixty-three cents per pound, a mark-up of 31 per cent on selling price, giving a gross margin of $70. on the seven cases in two days selling campaign.

Any of you merchants who have had experience in conducting a retail business in a country town, will appreciate the difficulty such merchants have in selling smoked bacon to the local trade, and particularly the farmer class. Up here in the Forest, Maylor Bros. were up against the proposition. Their farmer friends simply refused to buy bacon and hams at thirty-five or forty cents a pound, when they were only getting around $10.00 a cwt. for their hogs. Did Maylor's sit down and lose this business? No, siree, they did not. They bought picnic hams and small ends of bacon at a lower price. On the Friday I was in the store they sold 36 hams and showed me an order which they were rushing off for a further supply of 48 more. We have on file at our office, hundreds of similar instances, showing what merchants in every part of Canada are doing to stimulate trade. And they are not cutting the price, either. But they are simply using common sense coupled with their knowledge of human nature and the grocery business. People must eat, and I don't know of any other line or commodity they are more interested in.

Show your customers a new article of food or suggest a different way of preparing it for the table, and just see how easy it is to get them interested. You won't have to cut the price to clinch the sale.

I would say that the only justifiable excuse for cutting a price or putting a price on goods that does not include a proper percentage of running expense, is to dispose of dead stock or to clean up a line that you do not intend to restock.

Thoughts To Digest

In conclusion, I would like to leave a few thoughts with you.

It is a mistake to suppose that you have to fight your competitor. Nothing was ever permanently gained by fighting. Fighting of any kind is pure destruction. Your competitor does not have to be your enemy. He can and should be your friend. Competition does not kill trade. It builds trade, stimulates trade, and makes new trade. No one person can suit everybody. No man can get all possible business in any community. His personality attracts some and repels others. Wherever there is a lot of business for one man, there is business for someone else.

Don't hate your competitor. Hate is always expensive. Get acquainted with him. You may learn something.

Don't knock your competitor. It sounds bad, and is bad. Be a good sport. Play the game. Keep good-natured.

Beat your competitor if you can, but remember that the surest way to beat him is to sell better goods, give prompter service. Don't fight by cutting prices. Keep your margin of fair profit. If your competitor lies about you, or uses underhand methods to harm you, don't worry. He is cutting off his nose to spite his face. He cannot fool all the people all the time. Straight business and good nature go hand in hand, and always win out in the long run.

Some of you may agree with what I have told you. There are others no doubt who do not. But whether you do or not, I want you to understand that I did not come here to lay down any fast rule for your guidance. I have endeavored to show you what merchants are doing, and some of the mistakes which they have made and some of the methods adopted by those merchants who are laying up a surplus of their earnings for a comfortable old age.

My idea is to give you something to think about. Something to carry home, to discuss at your next meeting or with your neighbor the next time you drop into his store.

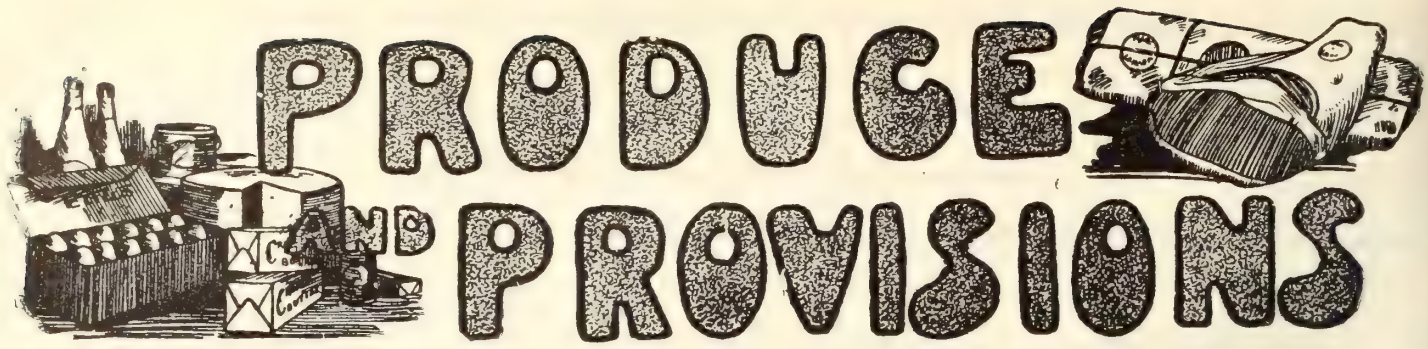
Conditions Good For a Fair Crop Of Maple Syrup

Montreal, (Special).—Larger supplies of the new make of maple syrup are being offered on Bonsecoeur Market daily. As early as a week ago farmers from the district near Montreal were offering the new make in bulk at $1.75 per gallon. Towards the latter part of the week bigger supplies arrived, but the price remained unchanged. After Thursday of last week a frost came which held throughout the day and would curtail the run which may mean some suspension of sugaring activities.

Average Crop Expected

C. P. Macdonald, manager of United Maple Products Company, Granby, Quebec, told Canadian Grocer representative that supplies had been delivered to them early last week but that the quantities were small. Since there has been very little rain up-to-date the quality of the run is expected to be good and the quantity fair. Mr. Macdonald looks for an average crop this year but does not predict anything about price. Since supplies held from last year are light throughout the country, and in the West practically nothing, the demand is good and shipments to the West have already begun. This year's supply comes on a market which is pretty well cleaned up and prices may be expected to hold, if not advance as the sugar season passes on.



The Poorer Man has Right to Margarine

British Local Government Board in 1913 in its Investigations to Ascertain Comparative Nutritive Values of Margarine and Butter Arrived at the Conclusion That There is No Appreciable Difference Between These Fatty Foods

GROCERS and provision men cannot have too many plain facts at their finger ends about the products they handle. Such facts often furnish the best selling talk—authentic, convincing reasons why one food is recommended to a likely purchaser. And on no food product is it easier to be well informed than oleomargarine for the simple reason that it is under uninterrupted government inspection at every step of its manufacture, a fact which, when properly realized, gives the highest guarantee to its purity.

Oleomargarine was first discovered during the Franco-German war in 1870-71. The scarcity of fat foods which in the end led to the capitulation of Paris was undermining the health and fighting strength of the people. A chemist, Hippolyte Mege, produced a batch of oleomargarine which he had made by churning skimmed milk and beef fats. He had shrewdly argued that the flavor of the butter fat in milk was due to the secretion of the animal fat within the fluid. So he concluded that if skimmed milk were churned with the fat taken direct from the animal, it would absorb the fat and would produce a butter. That is the basic difference between oleomargarine and butter: the nutritive fats in the one pass through the udder of the cow in the milk to be separated once more by the beat of the churn into the form we know, and which might be termed analytic food; in the other case the fats are taken direct from the animal and are mixed in proper proportions to make what can best be termed a synthetic food.

Two Billion Pounds in a Year

While oleomargarine is a comparatively new food product, its use has increased by leaps and bounds until it is estimated that today the world's consumption amounts to roundly 2,000,000,000 lbs.

The materials are oleo oil, (an oil pressed from choice beef fats), neutral, (a somewhat similar product made from the leaf fat of the pig), vegetable oil (refined to salad quality), and milk products (comprising milk, cream and sometimes butter according to the grade of oleomargarine produced). Each of these materials in some form or other is in use in every household every day and no question is raised regarding its wholesomeness or food value. Surely they are as wholesome and as good when combined as when separate. They are churned together to form an emulsion which is crystallized by contact with ice water—then salted and worked as butter is salted and worked.

No Appreciable Difference

The British Local Government Board in 1913 reported that "from time to time investigations have been undertaken with a view to ascertaining the comparative nutritive values of margarine and butter. The general conclusion which has been arrived at, is that there is no appreciable difference between the nutritive value of these fatty foods. All fats used for margarine making, whether they are of animal or vegetable origin, must be practically odorless and tasteless; this implies a high degree of refinement and purity. The advantage which butter possesses over margarine is esthetic rather than dietetic and the difference in prices between these two articles represent what the consumer is willing to pay for luxury."

If oleomargarine is clean, wholesome and nutritious, and is sold on its merits at reasonable prices, it clearly has a legitimate place among our standard food products.

Oleomargarine at the rate of nearly 1,000,000 pounds a month has for the last three years been consumed in Canada. Its use was greatly stimulated during the war. Many people who never used it before then found it cheap and wholesome, and since have been using it regularly.

Canadian grocers and provision men, voicing the ideas of consumers, hope the Government will not restore the old regulations. The chief interest in favor of their restoration is the dairy farmers who claim that farm butter sales are being damaged by the sale of oleomargarine. It is a curious fact, however, that in those countries producing the largest amounts of oleomargarine, dairying is most prosperous. How could it be otherwise? In the production of oleomargarine large quantities of skimmilk are conserved. High-class butter is produced from the cream, and so the whole product of the cow is marketed. Some of the butter journals complain that the dairy farmers of New York, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Michigan sell their cream, and instead of buying butter from the creameries, buy oleomargarine for their own tables. Well, they know a good product when they see it, as dairy farmers do in Holland and Denmark.

The Poorer Man's Right

Consumers who wish butter can always have it if they are willing to pay the higher price made necessary by the greater cost of its production. There are thousands of families of the hard-working class who claim the right to other foods produced by a process that brings them within the reach of their pay envelopes. That is the real demand in Canadian industrial centres to-day. If the family of the small-wage earner did not have oleomargarine they would not be in a bit better position to buy more butter. They would either have to go without or use some less wholesome substitute.

That the sale of oleomargarine will not necessarily lessen the consumption of butter is evidenced by British experience. There the sale of artificially colored oleomargarine is permitted without any restrictions other than to insure its sale for what it actually is. In addition the British market receives

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, March 22.—In general the produce market is firm with a more active market. Hogs are steady in price with a better demand for fresh and smoked meats. Some lines of fresh meats are a little easier but smoked meats are firm. Cooked meats in some cases show a slight advance. The butter market is stronger after its weakness of last week. A better demand for Canadian creamery has given a better tone although the price is not up to that of a week ago. Eggs are fairly easy in price with a lower price than quoted last week. Cheese quotations remain unchanged with nothing of note in the situation. Lard maintains its strength with better buying and a strong tone. The colder weather has helped the fish market and prices are firm under a good demand. There is no change in margarine.

STRONGER BUTTER MARKET

Montreal

BUTTER—Receipts of butter locally for the last week show a slight decline and the market is influenced by a better demand for Canadian creamery butter. During the early part of last week butter displayed a weakness with a decline of 2c per lb. but towards the close of the week the market was firmer, owing to the limited quantities of the better class creamery butter available. The demand is improved and with limited supplies the market shows a stronger tendency at the lower values.

EGGS STRONGER

Montreal.

EGGS—The feature of the local egg situation during the latter part of last week was a firmer feeling and prices scored an advance of one cent, due principally, to the strength of the Chicago market. At the beginning of this week the market stood firm with prices at 34c and 35c per doz. for special eggs and 31c for new laid.

FIRMER MARKET FOR HOGS

Montreal

FRESH MEATS—There is practically no change in the price of selected lightweight hogs on this market but the tone is firm with a tendency towards an advance due to the influence of outside markets. The demand is fair and an active trade is being done. Fresh cuts of pork are said to be easier in price with trimmed shoulders quoted at 19c and trimmed loins at 28c per lb.

MAPLE SYRUP $1.75

Montreal

MAPLE SYRUP—The new season opened with fairly good supplies of the first run offered on the market in bulk at $1.75 per gal. During the first week the weather conditions were favorable but the frost which held steadily stopped the run and the rain of the early part of the week may have some effect on the quality. Producers look for an average crop with a steady, if not strong price. Supplies of last year's goods are pretty well cleaned up in the east.

COLDER WEATHER HELPS FISH

Montreal

FRESH FISH—There is little change in the fish market. The colder weather has lessened the anxiety of local dealers to unload, which with an improved demand gives a better tone to the market without a definite change in prices.

HAS RIGHT TO MARGARINE

butter from practically every butter-producing country in the world. Still the consumption of butter in England prior to the war was 17½ lb. per head; of oleomargarine 8 lb. In the United States the consumption of oleomargarine was 1½ lb. and butter 18 lb. respectively.

These figures show that although England consumed six times as much oleomargarine per head as did the United States, the relative consumption of butter was practically the same in both countries.

Grocers who handle both products realize to the full that restricting the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine when so much wanted is merely harassing one branch of national activity in favor of another.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, March 22.—The hog market developed stronger tendencies during the week. As we went to press last week, the market was fairly easy with big packers endeavoring to hammer down prices. Later in the week, however, under lighter receipts and a keen outside demand, the market strengthened and as we go to press the market continues strong with values considerably higher. There do not appear to be many hogs throughout the country and any effort on the part of shippers to hold back shipments seems to result in advancing the market. The big packers still maintain that prices are too high and generally bid lower than the smaller outside buyers. There is little change in smoked meats, although in some quarters prices are slightly reduced. The same applies to cooked meats. Some packers have reduced cooked hams while others have made a slight advance. Butter holds firm while cheese is inclined to be easier with prices slightly shaded. Eggs are firm at the lower values. Lard has an easier undertone while shortening is steady. Fish prices are fairly steady but on some lines there is a shade easier feeling. Poultry is dull and, apart from lower prices on geese, quotations are unchanged.

BUTTER HOLDS FIRM

Toronto.

BUTTER—The butter market continues in a firm position with New Zealand still a factor in assisting to maintain a steady tone. Two cars of New Zealand butter arrived in the city this week and it is said the quality is excellent. Quotations are unchanged at 39c to 40c for No. 1, with the under grades around 35c per lb.

CHEESE—The market is dull with little movement other than consumptive requirements. Owing to the lack of business for export, the market is inclined to be easy with some shading in prices. New fodder made cheese is quoted at 18c to 18½c per lb. with September at 20c. June cheese is becoming quite scarce and is bringing 26c per lb.

BACON TENDS EASIER

Toronto.

PROVISIONS—An easier feeling prevails in the market for cured meats, reflecting the lower prices in the hog market. Packers who have been quoting the highest figure on smoked hams have reduced their quotations one cent per pound making the range 33c to 34c on small and medium sizes. Larger sizes are likewise reduced. Bacon prices are unchanged, but a reduction of $2 per barrel is registered on pickled rolls, bringing the price on lightweight to $47 and heavy to $41.

HOG PRICES STRENGTHEN

Toronto.

FRESH MEATS—As we went to press last week the hog market was easy at $12.50 per cwt. on the fed and watered basis. The market at the end of the week, however, closed stronger at $13 and as we go to press the market continues strong under a further advance of 25c. The upward movement in values is attributed to the lighter receipts and the keen demand from outside sources. The cattle market is dull with little change in quotations. A few spring lambs are arriving and are quoted dressed at $12 to $16 each. Dressed pork cuts are reduced one cent per pound.

Women of Canada Demand Margarine Be Made Permanent

Interviewing the Hon. W. R. Motherwell, Dominion Minister of Agriculture, Mrs. Adam Shortt, of Ottawa, on behalf of the National Council of Women, recently impressed upon the minister that oleomargarine is a food demanded by the women of Canada and the manufacture and sale should be made permanent. Mrs. Shortt contradicted the statement made by some members of the Dairy Association when they stated that butter is available to every person, and that there is no need for the sale of margarine in Canada. Mrs. Shortt maintained that there were thousands of people, particularly children, eating margarine who would be denied this necessary fat if margarine were barred from the country, simply because they could not afford to buy butter.

Mrs. Shortt went into statistics and plainly showed the Minister of Agriculture that the dairy industry had not been injured by the sale of margarine, but on the other hand the amount of butter exported from Canada during the years 1917-19 was three times the amount during the years previous to the period margarine was permitted. She went on to show that Denmark is considered the finest dairy country in the world and yet the consumption of margarine in that country is steadily increasing and that Canada is the only country in the world in which there are restrictions on the manufacture and sale of margarine.

Mrs. Shortt declared that citizens should not be denied a food that is wholesome and made under the strictest sanitary conditions claiming that "if margarine was good enough for the men in the trenches during the war, then surely it was good enough for the citizens of Canada."

Tell This to Your Best Customer

You can safely say to your best customer:

"Mrs. Smith, I recommend Pilliner Brand Cocoanut. It is made from selected nuts and because it comes in packages none of the flavor is lost by evaporation.

"When you open the package just notice how pure and white this cocoanut is and it is the most economical you can buy because its keeping qualities are unequalled."

Your most particular customers will like Pilliner Brand Cocoanut. Ask your jobber or write us.

What is the Character of Your Store?

A man's character is the sum total of his qualities—minus his defects! The average quality of the goods he sells determines the character of a dealer's stock. This is reflected in the character of his trade. Good goods attract good customers. Quality always finds its level.

In city after city, town after town, village after village, you will find FIVE ROSES Flour sold by the recognized leaders in the trade. Of course, it is only one item, but if you select your other stock according to the FIVE ROSES standard you will increase the times you sell satisfaction.

When you select your stock, you are also selecting the trade you will serve.

"Sight Sales" of Eddy's Onliwon Toilet Paper Holders

"They see and they buy." That is what merchants everywhere are saying about their sales of Eddy's Onliwon Toilet Paper Holders.

This handsome, nickelled fixture, equipped with one thousand sheets of fine toilet paper is a "bargain" at the price. It is a profit maker too. Order a small quantity, show them and see them move out of your store. Every one you sell creates a demand for refills—two-way profits for you. Ask your jobber.

Grocers, Hardware Stores, General Stores, and Drug Stores, are selling Quantities. It is your opportunity now.

Sell an Economy Eddy's Onliwon Paper Towel Holders

For kitchen, bathroom and general family use. Keep clean and sanitary in the white enamelled Onliwon Cabinet. Onliwon Paper Towels can be sold at a very moderate price, allowing you a good profit.

They save the finer towels, save labor and cost of washing. They are more absorbent than cotton and just as soft to use.

SLICED PINEAPPLE LOOKS HIGHER

A packer of Hawaiian pineapple, who has a large distribution in Canada, stated that the winter pack is completely sold up and that the spring pack is fairly well booked and that higher prices can be expected. A report from New York on the Hawaiian pineapple situation says: "Hawaiian pineapple seems slated for a steady advance with nothing to stop the upward movement unless it be the high range of values which will limit consumption. Stocks throughout the country are not sufficient to cause any reaction as they are light in all quarters. California fruits are a parallel to pineapple to some extent, although the shortage is not so pronounced."

IMPERIAL Floor Dressing

Get the dust with the dirt -

You can't eliminate dust entirely, but you can control it. Imperial Floor Dressing will keep it where it belongs—on the floor—not floating around to settle on shelves, counters or merchandise.

By holding the dust to the floor with Imperial Floor Dressing, it is easily swept up and completely removed, thereby keeping your store bright and spotlessly clean.

Imperial Floor Dressing cleans and preserves wood, linoleum or oil cloth. It does not gum or evaporate. Prevents checking and cracking. One gallon will treat from 500 to 700 feet of floor surface, and one application will last for weeks.

Use Imperial Floor Dressing and display it prominently. You will find both profitable. One sells the other. Ask the Imperial Oil Salesman to explain the large market there is for this product in your territory.

$100 for a name—for a match

WE want a name for our new Match which will shortly be marketed from the most Modern Match Factory in Canada.

We want a name that will help to sell, and advertise our matches. It should be short, easy to remember and easy to pronounce.

A grand prize of $100.00 is offered for the best name submitted; $50.00 prize for the second best name and $25.00 prize for the third best name.

The following facts about our new Match may help you in "coining" a name for it

It is square in shape and stronger than ordinary matches because it contains more wood. It is made from tough woods—aspen and bass.

Being square, it burns freely and is easier to hold in the fingers when striking.

The square shape holds the head on securely. The heads do not fly off, and there is no afterglow.

The rules of this Contest are very simple:

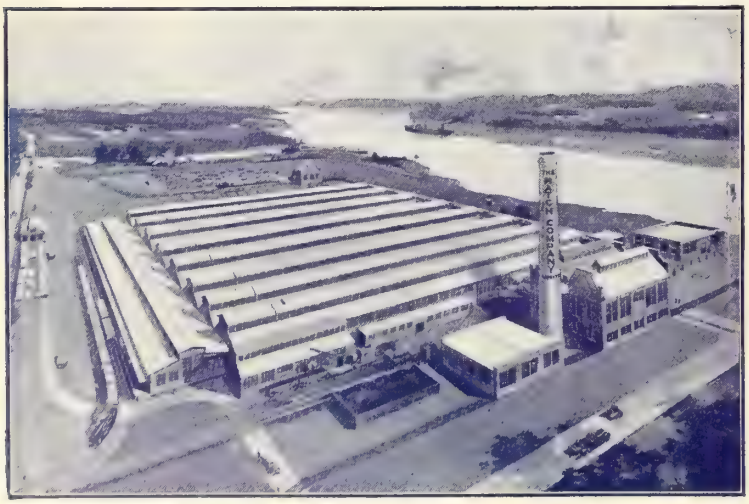
(1) The Contest is open to all Retail Grocers and Retail Grocers' Clerks in Canada and other employees.

(2) Should more than one contestant submit the names which the judges select as the winning names the prize money will be equally divided.

(3) All contestants must sign their own names and business addresses plainly on the sheet on which their suggestions are submitted.

(4) Each contestant may submit as many names as he wishes, provided the suggestions are received before April 30th.

(5) All names sent in to be and remain the property of The Match Company, Limited, and to be available for their use at their convenience.



The Match Company, Limited, Plant at Berthierville, Quebec, the finest and most modern in Canada.

Contest Closes April 30th, 1922.

The judges will be The Editor "Canadian Grocer" and J. J. Gibbons, Limited, advertising agents, Toronto. Their decision to be final.

Send your names to A. W. Hugman, Sales Manager

Welch's

"THE NATIONAL DRINK"

Welch's sells on quality. It is the pure, rich juice of choicest Concord Grapes from the Niagara Grape Belt. At the present reduced prices Welch's becomes a favored purchase for all your customers.

Sell Welch's

—as a social drink, for punches, with lemonade, ginger ale, or by itself, for the home or public receptions, dances and parties.

—as a table beverage.

—as a breakfast fruit course

—as an addition to desserts and ices.

—as a health drink, recognized by physicians and dietitians.

The many uses to which Welch's may be put should bring you a profitable volume of trade in this one item alone. Other Welch products include Welch Quality Jams, made from perfect fruit. Grapelade, Peachlade, Cherrilade, Plumlade, Grape Currantlade, Strawberilade, Orange Marmalade, in 15 oz. glass jars and standard 4-lb. tins. Have your wholesaler quote prices on Welch's in large, medium, junior and fountain-size bottles, and our full line of Welch Jams.

A Word about Matches!

GIVE a moment's thought to the match question. There are three important points in which you, Mr. Dealer, are interested.

Quality—— Safety ——
Profit ——

120,000,000 Matches a day.

Non-poisonous.

No after-glow.

No flying heads.

No broken sticks.

Large, well-filled boxes.

Eddy's Matches are as good as matches can be—there are none better in the world.

EDDY'S are right as to QUALITY

Eddy's Matches are safe. We make them taste unpleasant so that rats and mice will not touch them, yet they are non-poisonous—harmless to children. Eddy's Matches will not explode if stepped on. The heads do not fly off and they do not glow when blown out.

EDDY'S are right as to SAFETY

Eddy's Matches give a better margin of profit than any other. Because of our enormous output, we sell better matches and sell them cheaper. The Dealer gets the benefit.

EDDY'S are right as to PROFIT

From every standpoint, Eddy's are the matches for you to stock. When ordering, tell your jobber you want EDDY'S MATCHES.

EDDY'S MATCHES

THE E. B. EDDY CO., LIMITED

HULL, CANADA

Consider the Consumer

Supplying your customers with products of "A none better quality" is an obligation.

After quality the resale price is a serious consideration.

We contend that the Consumer will not pay over thirty-five cents for a "medium" 16-oz. size bottle of Grape Juice. Attempting to sell at a higher price will merely limit your sale.

We have made it possible for you to supply the best of quality at popular prices, and at the same time paying to you a "worth while" profit.

$6.00 per case for Large size, One Dozen
$6.50 per case for Medium size, Two Dozen

Do not buy Grape Juice at a higher list. An increased cost per case means that your Grape Juice cannot be passed on to the consumer at popular prices at a profit.

OUR GUARANTEE:—Marsh's Grape Juice is the Pure Juice of choicest Concord grapes. No manufacturer uses better grapes, in fact Grape Juice of a better quality cannot be made. Every bottle guaranteed to please your trade. It is just a little sweeter, and with a better flavor.

There's Another Grape Juice!

One of the 13,000 Growers

Raisin Changes

The California Associated Raisin Co. henceforth will be known as the "Sun-Maid Raisin Growers"

This change in name became effective on February 17th. Letterheads, bill-heads and all other printed forms after that date will bear the new name and all checks, money orders and other remittances should be made out to "Sun-Maid Raisin Growers" instead of to "California Associated Raisin Co." as in the past.

This change is deemed desirable for the following reasons:

"Sun-Maid Raisin Growers" is the only truly representative name of this organization since it is owned by the growers and operated by their representatives.

The Sun-Maid brand—the growers' own brand—is the most widely distributed and largest selling brand of raisins on the market and the name "Sun-Maid," therefore, is a natural part of the organization's name.

Formerly

California Associated

Now—Sun-Maid

Membership 13,000

Company Name

Sun-Maid Seedless, sweet and tender, are perfect for stewing, with ice cream, or just munching.

In short, the words "Sun-Maid Raisin Growers" explain just what this organization is—a great association of raisin growers who produce the Sun-Maid Brand of Raisins.

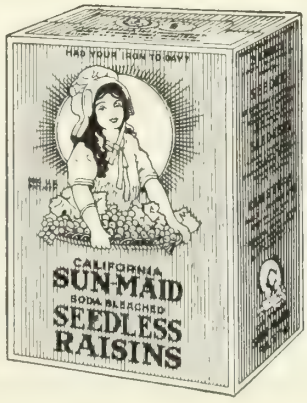
This is not a company controlled by any one man or small group of men, but by the raisin growers themselves, and is strictly a co-operative organization.

The owners, on the average, operate only 20 acres of vineyards each.

Remember this organization, therefore, and refer to it in the future by its proper name—Sun-Maid Raisin Growers.

These growers take this opportunity to thank the trade for its support in the past and hope for a continuation of its co-operation in the future, without which it would be impossible to properly serve the public with this important and delicious food product.

Sun-Maid Seeded Muscats, sweet and juicy, make the best raisin pie and raisin bread.



Sun-Maid Soda Bleached, a delicious sweet raisin especially adapted to making cakes, cookies and French pastries.

Sun-Maid Clusters, large, tender, sweet raisins are just the thing for the after-dinner tidbit.

Practical Information

The Proprietary Article Price Issue of February 10 has met with a great deal of approval all over Canada. The attached unsolicited letter indicates what the retailers in one district think of it:

The Canadian Grocer,
Toronto,
Ontario,
Dear Sirs:—

The writer has been in touch with some of our customers the last few days who are prominent in the grocery business at different points, and we think it only right to tell you how much the proprietary price list in the issue of February 10th is appreciated by them. I heard different remarks that made me feel that the retail grocers viewed it as a special and live protection to their interests.

Sarnia Ont. T. KENNY & CO. Ltd.

Canadian Grocer plans to issue similar numbers later on so that the retail trade may have up-to-date market information regularly throughout the year.

Mr. Grocer!

Warm weather and a poorly made refrigerator that doesn't do its work efficiently is a bad combination.

If your present refrigerator isn't always dry inside and outside — if your ice bill is expensive — if the ice in the refrigerator doesn't keep your meats, butter, milk, fruits, vegetables, etc., in perfect condition for a reasonable time — then you need the Eureka Patented Dry Cold Air Refrigerator!

The Eureka will keep all your perishable foods in perfect condition and with less expense and trouble. We have all the popular designs in stock for immediate shipment.

CERTO

Makes Perfect Jams and Jellies

Announcement

Certo—the pure-fruit pectin product for making perfect jams and jellies—is being introduced to the trade in good time for big business during the approaching jam and jelly making season.

Certo meets the housewife's great need for a jelly and jam making product that will be ECONOMICAL, CERTAIN IN RESULTS, and a TIME SAVER.

Certo is an absolutely pure-fruit product containing no gelatine or preservative. It enables the housewife to make perfect jams or jellies from any fruit. It reduces boiling to one minute and makes 50% more jam or jelly from the same amount of fruit. It never fails.

It makes jams and jellies that retain the full original color and flavor of the fruit, ensuring quality unapproached by old methods. It never fails to make perfect jam and jelly, because it is a pure-fruit product. Nature's own jellifying principle—pectin.

Certo jams and jellies will be made this summer from fresh fruits in thousands of homes all over Canada. In winter time dried and canned fruits or bottled juices (such as grape juice) will be used.

Certo, wherever it has been introduced, has met with unqualified success and has proved a steady, repeating seller.

Thus CERTO is a YEAR ROUND SELLER

Besides the profit in Certo you will increase your sales of sugar, fresh fruits, jelly glasses, canned fruits and fruit juices.

Certo is going to simplify and improve jelly and jam making in the home—the sooner you stock up and boost Certo—the more you will profit. Write us for full particulars and prices.

The Publisher's Page

"You missed sending me last week's copy," writes a Western Canada city grocer. "How do you expect me to do my buying when I haven't the weekly current Price List? Don't miss any more like that because in these times I can't afford to buy in the dark."

So writes an old friend of ours because he was not getting CANADIAN GROCER. We were much concerned to think that any subscriber had been treated this way and investigated at once to find why.

And then we found it.

This merchant, though highly valuing CANADIAN GROCER, had failed to renew his yearly subscription.

Invoices had been sent to him but they never got past the boy who opened the mail. A draft had gone to him in the usual way, but he was out of town. And he had quite forgotten when his subscription fell due.

Now, CANADIAN GROCER is audited by the Audit Bureau of Circulation who are very strict about carrying subscribers much in arrears—so when we got no reply from this retailer we were forced to believe he had no further use for the paper, and so stopped sending it. Then he was angry with us.

When renewals are sent in promptly, all this inconvenience is saved. The subscriber continues to receive his paper and is not annoyed by missing copies he may be specially interested in—for it's always the special copy that you wanted most that gets lost, isn't it?

We'll send you a regular invoice in plenty of time before your expiration, Then—

Just a cheque pinned to your letter head—a three cent stamp and the thing is done for another year.

No trouble, no inconvenience—everything business like and accurate.

And your trade paper—your business newspaper—always at your elbow.

Canadian Grocer,

Recommend an Economical Tea

IF YOU were a customer going into a store, would you rather pay a moderate price for a very good tea or buy a cheap tea just because the price was low?

A customer comes into your store for tea. Is it good business to sell her a cheap bulk that requires two teaspoonsful to the cup, when you could sell her Red Rose Tea that will give her two cups to one teaspoonful?

Between a tasteless wasteful tea and a wasteless tasteful one lies a customer's good will and continued trade.

Next time you are asked for a pound of tea, recommend Red Rose Tea because it is moderately priced and economical.

Making Your Income Tax Returns

There Can be no Evasion of the Income Tax Law, and Merchants Generally Should be Fully Informed as to What is Expected of Them—Some Instructions as to How to go About it

IT IS IMPORTANT that all should understand there can be no evasion of the income tax law. The income tax papers must be filled in. The tax commissioners have their instructions. It is the desire of Canadian Grocer to aid its readers in their difficulties in this matter. A detailed explanation of the papers to be filled in at this time is therefore interesting.

Obtain three copies of Form T1, fill in on page 1 complete answers to each question except item 6 on list, which a merchant in business on his own account need not fill unless he trades under some name or sign not his own Christian and surname.

Now turn to page 4 of returns sheet. You have the option of making a statement of your trading account on your own account sheets or of filling in this page. Whichever way you do it, use the greatest care and regard for accuracy. It is far better to pay a few dollars tax than be pulled up short and fined for making a careless, slipshod or false return.

Total value of merchandise sold during year.

Inventory of stock at cost at beginning of business year.

Add cost of all goods bought for reale, including freight and express harges.

Total.

Total value merchandise in stock at nd of business year. Subtract.

Extend this last total to outer column nd again subtract, as it will show your ross profits for year 1920. Enter every ther kind of income derived from your usiness, such as cream agency or insurnce commission.

Total gross profits.

A knowledge of your total expenses or the following items is absolutely ssential. Dig up and total this inormation:

Wages actually paid to employees, not proprietor.

Rent of store, stable or garage.

DATES TO BE REMEMBERED

March 31. Last day for employers to send in statement re employees receiving $1,000 per annum and over.

April 29. Last day for return of income and payment of either the whole tax or at least one-fourth of it.

June 20. Second Instalment due.

Aug. 31. Third Instalment due.

Oct. 31. Fourth and Last Instalment due.

Advertising, depreciation on delivery outfit at 10 per cent.

Horse feed, horse shoeing.

Gasoline, oil and tires for truck.

Cartage when paid to outside firm or teamster.

Telephones, including long-distance calls.

Office supplies, such as books, counter check books, bill heads, files, etc., and postage stamps.

Interest on borrowed capital used in business.

Bank charges and exchange on cheques.

Heating store, lighting store, also water (if any).

Taxes on business premises (not on dwelling).

Business tax. Motor truck license.

Insurance on stock, fixtures, horses, rigs or motor truck.

Depreciation to store equipment and utensils, at 10 per cent.

Cost of wrapping paper, bags and twine, also ice.

Freight and express (outward charges only).

Take a sheet of foolscap paper and make a complete list of the above items. Scrutinize your files and books. Get out the exact cost of each item. Total up the whole expenses cost and subtract from gross profits; this will leave net trading profits for year 1921 and when making the return to your tax commissioner see that a copy of the expenses sheet is securely fastened to the official return sheet, also keep a copy yourself.

Turn Back to Page Two

Leaving page 4 for a few minutes we will turn back to page 2, taking the questions by their own serial number:

No. 1. Many merchants to-day have adopted the sensible plan of paying themselves a wage or salary each month, and paying back into the till for their own groceries, meats, etc. So if you draw a wage from out your business enter total amount here, also any gratuities or pension. If none, say "none."

No. 2. Mark "none" here. This query is for doctors and professional men, not merchants.

No. 3. As you have already shown all your income from commissions on page 4, mark this item "See page 4."

No. 4. Enter here net amount of your trading profits from page 4, which includes the commissions from cream agency, etc.

No. 4. (a) Give actual value of goods drawn from out store and for which you have not paid back cash into the till. See your answer to item No. 1 on this page of return.

No. 5. Enter here the total rent you have collected from your tenants, without deductions, and give location of the properties. If you have none mark "none."

No. 6. Enter the amount of interest or dividends received from investments or stock of Canadian companies. If none, say so, but should you have any and have the share certificates deposited with bank for a loan, deduct carrying charges.

(2) Follow the same course as above in this subsection. Pay attention to footnote to this item.

No. 7. If you hold any mortgages, notes or debenture bonds or have interest accruing at bank on savings account enter it here.

No. 8. Few merchants hold such positions. There is really no profit and seldom any pay, but should you be deriving any monetary benefits enter here.

No. 9 Income from war bonds, less carry charges. Make separate entry of 1919 issue, less carrying charges. The latter are not exempt from this tax.

No. 10. Enter here any other source of income, such as "rum running," "bootlegging" or "special license inspector's fees" or any other unlikely occupation for a respectable merchant.

No. 11. Total the column.

Filling Page Three

No. 12. As you have made out a complete list of all your business and trading expenses, it is unnecessary to do more than write "See page 4," or "attached sheet."

No. 13. You have already entered in your expenses account the interest charges on borrowed trading capital, so this item deals only with charges you pay on mortgages on property you own and have rented to a third party, or should you own and not rent your business premises and have money borrowed thereon. Pay attention to footnote to this item.

No. 14. Enter amount of taxes you pay on property you own and have rented to a third party.

(a) Premiums paid for insurance on property you own and have rented to others.

(b) Repairs to your property which you rent to others, but give location and names of persons who received payment for work done.

No. 15. You did not deduct anything for bad debts on page 4 or on attached sheet, so enter here the actual amount you have written off and of which you have ceased to expect payment.

No. 16. It is impossible to get claims accepted for loss on your stock of saleable goods or the house you occupy, but you can claim depreciation on property you own, and have rented to others, i. e., for fair wear and tear say 5 per cent. on brick and 7½ per cent. on frame properties.

No. 17. Show net income from war bonds which are exempt from income tax, also under No. 8, on page 2, if any.

No. 18. Contributions to patriotic purposes or in cases where you are contributing towards support of a relative unable to keep himself, or his family, state the case fully and give names, which will be verified by the commissioner of taxation.

No. 19. Total the column.

Assets and Liabilities

When you made up your books at the end of the business year, you quite naturally made a record sheet of these items before opening your books for the new year.

Assets (You Own)

1920 stock on hand.
Cash and balance at bank.
Retail accounts on your books.
Customers' notes you hold.
Value of real estate, buildings.
Value of real estate (land).
Trucks, rigs or tools.
Office furniture and fixtures.
Horses.
Other investments and bonds.

Liabilities (You owe)

Total of trading debt.
Notes you have to meet.
Loans on property.
Loans for business only.
Unpaid interest.
Other business debts.
Total both columns.

The last, is the question of what you have to pay to the inspector, if anything. You will enter in space for gross income from foot of page 2 the total of that column and, directly below, the total from page 3, then subtract, which will give the net income.

Your Taxable Income

Now subtract $1,000 if you are unmarried or $2,000 if you are married. This gives the taxable part of your net income, but there is yet to be deducted the normal tax of 4 per cent. on interest on your Victory bonds which are not of 1919 issue. You are also instructed to deduct $200 for each of your children under 18 years.

After deducting every one of above items you will pay to inspector 4 per cent. on the net amount, up to and including $5,000. Net incomes over $5,000 are subject to super or surtax graduating from 1 per cent. for the first thousand to 65 per cent. on incomes of one million.

It may be best to enclose a cheque for the full amount due to the department. Otherwise there will be interest at the rate of 5 per cent. on the unpaid balance.

I have endeavored to make the answers to the various questions so plain that every reader can by careful reading and a little thought fully understand. However, to my old friends in the grocery business whom I helped over the fence last year I would express my regrets that we cannot meet like we then did.

Grocers' Section R. M. A. Appoints Dom. Committee

Ottawa, March 27, (Special.—The formation of a Dominion committee, of the grocers' section of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, was completed at a meeting in the association's head office, Ottawa, last week, with the election of B. G. Crabtree of Ottawa, chairman pro tem. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Advisory Committee of the Grocers' section, and many important matters were dealt with. Those present were:—T. A. C. Kennedy, A. E. Kelly, Duncan Bell, B. G. Crabtree, T. W. Collins, E. M. Trowern, secretary; F. R. Perrott, assistant secretary and Mrs. F. H. Glen, assistant to the secretary. In the absence of A. Phillips, A. E. Kelly, occupied the chair.

In regard to the formation of the Dominion Board, the secretary, E. M. Trowern, explained that the grocers of the various provinces had requested that no definite action be taken, or anything done that would commit the retail grocers, until the views of the grocers in the various provinces had been obtained. The various provinces were then asked to appoint representatives on the Dominion committee, which was done. In future, when the advisory committee prepares any reports they will be sent out to each member of the Grocers' Dominion committee, who will return them to the advisory committee with an authentic report from each province, so that the advisory committee may state that they are the views of the entire retail grocery trade.

The appointment of a permanent chairman, was left until the first meeting of the Dominion committee. The committee is composed of the following members:—British Columbia, T. H. White of Vancouver;-Alberta, Sam Taylor of Medicine Hat; Saskatchewan, T. M. McEwan of Kindersley; Manitoba, C. E. Turner of Winnipeg; Ontario, B. G. Crabtree of Ottawa; Quebec, J. E. Sansregret of Montreal; New Brunswick, C. H. Burtt, Fredericton; Nova Scotia, John Forsyth of Dartmouth; Prince Edward Island, R. H. Jenkins of Charlottetown.

QUEBEC PROVINCIAL BOARD WILL MEET IN QUEBEC CITY

Montreal, March 27.—At a meeting of the Montreal Retail Merchants' Association the other evening, the suggestion that the next convention of the Quebec Provincial Board of the Association be held in Quebec City, was assented to. It will be held on August 7, 8, and 9.

Among the resolutions passed by the Association, was one requesting the Montreal City Council to tax outside firms selling fish. The resolution suggests that the tax be the same as that imposed by the City Council of Ottawa, namely $250. Another resolution asked that the City Council prohibit all trading on the public markets after May 1.

WILL HAVE TO PAY SALES TAX AFTER APRIL FIRST

A decision has been given by the government in the case of the retail confectioner who appealed against a ruling whereby he was considered a manufacturer, because he manufactures candy on his premises, as a consequence of which he was obliged to pay sales tax. All arrears of taxes due the government have been cancelled, but after April first, retail confectioners will have to pay sales tax on all candy manufactured on the premises for sale in the store. In the meantime the Retail Merchants' Association is presenting amendments to the government, asking for the exclusion of retail confectioners as manufacturers. and recommend that for the time being retail confectioners do not take out manufacturer's licenses.

Sells Over One Thousand Pounds of Honey By Display of 5-lb. Tins on the Counter

Wolfville Fruit Co. at Wolfville, N. S., Use Large Bulletin Board to Tell Customers What The Store Has to Offer in the Way of "Specials" and Also of New Goods

IN A prominent position in the store of the Wolfville Fruit Co's. store, in Wolfville, N.S., is a large bulletin-board about six feet in height and nearly three feet in width. On this board are arranged clean, attractive show cards telling customers at a glance just what the firm has to offer in the way of specials, and something about new articles arriving in the store. The idea has proved a great stimulus to business, and is thoroughly read by all customers entering the store.

"Window and counter displays are changed often enough to keep them from becoming stale," stated Stanley A. Robinson, manager of the store, to Canadian Grocer. "Sales from the counter displays are quick and numerous. We recently made a display of honey on one of the counters which proved a great attraction. Many people seem to think that honey is used as a medicine to be purchased in small glass jars. We made a feature of the five pound tins and in a short time we sold over one thousand pounds, which showed us a nice profit."

Price tickets are used extensively in the store and window displays and have been found to be of much value in stimulating sales.

Showing Seasonable Lines in Attractive Window Displays

London, Ont.—East London merchants have several very attractive and seasonable windows. One of the best is that of Thos. Shaw and consists of a combination display of jams and marmalade and garden seeds. The seeds are placed on boxes raised about a foot above the floor of the window and covered with colored paper. A large box of seeds is placed at each side of the window and the entire space in between is used for jams and marmalade. The gay coloring of the packages of seeds and the bright coloring of the inside covers of the cases make a splendid background for the jars and tins of jam and marmalade. The window has proved an excellent business producer.

George Harvey has an entire window devoted to showing olives and the arrangement of the various sized bottles and jars is one that compels attention and draws business. By arranging small and large bottles and jars in various positions, Mr. Harvey has secured a window that is very attractive. His other window is given over to a display of early tomatoes, cucumbers, cauliflowers and other vegetables. The display is a tempting one and has produced excellent results.

An Arrangement of Various Lines

Another East side window that was striking was that of J. H. Husson. This is a mixed window. It has as a background a wall of packages of corn flakes. In front of this are pyramids of cans of preserved fruits and vegetables and in front of these are shown jams. The window is in every way a "showy" one, the labels on the various articles standing out very strikingly. When lighted at night the effect is equally striking and the display has attracted much attention and, what is more important, many buyers.

AN ERROR CORRECTED

In our issue of March 10 a news item appeared to the effect that Scales and Store Specialties, Ltd., had commenced business in Windsor, Ont., and that the officers of the company were formerly salesmen with the Canadian Toledo Scale Co. We find that incorrect information was given us, and that only one of the three mentioned was previously with that company.

What is Definition of a "Price Cutter?"

"One Who Gets on the Average Less Than it Costs Him to Replace His Goods and Makes a Profit," is One Way of Defining the "Price Cutter"—Read This Article—It Will Help You

By HENRY JOHNSON, Jr.

THE EDITOR of Canadian Grocer writes me thus:

What is your definition of price cutting? Would you consider a merchant a price cutter if he humped around and picked up a certain article at a lower price than the regular and sold it below regular retail price, and at the same time made his regular percentage of profit? Or would you consider this good merchandising? Is a price cutter a merchant who advertises certain branded popular lines at cost or below to attract trade to his store and loses money on that particular transaction? I have had several complaints from merchants in a certain city on the subject of price cutting. They ask for assistance in trying to abate the evil, so I would be glad to have your opinion on the subject.

If you stop to give it serious, careful, sober consideration, unbiassed by some condition of occurrence which may hurt you personally at the time, maybe you will find it difficult to define price cutting.

Certainly, I should not say the merchant first asked about was a cutter. If by "humping around" you can buy anything on such a basis as to enable you to sell it below regular figures and yet make your normal margin, surely that proves that others might do likewise. That probably means that the "regular" retail price is too high and should be reduced. I should say this is good merchandising from both the standpoint of the retailer who thereby attracts trade and the public which thereby gets better service and a more equitable deal.

As to the man who advertises popular brands at cost or below to attract trade—that depends. Suppose that man figures that he can spend 2½ per cent. of his sales for advertising. On $100,000 sales, that is $2,500 a year, $208.33 per month. Suppose he has the habit, so long continued as to be known by the people of his town, of using a single column, five inch space every Monday night in the local paper, and that said space costs him $25 each week. That space, then, consumes approximately $100 each month and he has over $100 surplus.

Advertising Includes All Mediums

Now what is advertising? Is it not any paid-for means to attract business? If so, then any medium used to bring people to your store is advertising, and so long as it is legitimate, on the level, fair and not against public policy, any merchant has a right to use it. Further if this means is open to all, nobody can find fault with its use.

So let us suppose that this man decides to consume his extra $100 per month in specially reduced prices, thereby giving his customers $100 in price concessions instead of giving that sum to the newspapers, who shall say this is not legitimate?

Go further. Assume that this policy results in an increase of business so that our merchant sells $125,000 with only the added expense of an extra boy, other expenses remaining constant so that expense ratio is reduced by a sixth—say from 18 to 15 per cent.—why cannot that man divide this advantage with his customers, or give it all to them? Such increase would yield him $625 a year more advertising money, plus savings of $675 on expenses. He might very easily, therefore, turn back to his customers through special prices, an additional aggregate of anywhere between $650 and $1,300—and proceed to build his business further by geometrical progression.

So what shall we say? Can we think of any way in which this freedom of action shall be curtailed? Can we honestly say that its curtailment would be for the public good? And let us remember that, however we may feel about it, the public good must set the limits everywhere.

Let us ask ourselves further: Are we ourselves ever guilty of doing just such things as we object to in others? Have we never sold anything below "regular?" O, yes—maybe sometimes when we got stuck on too much. Well, did it occur to you at that time that perhaps your neighbor did not have too much of that article and that maybe your cut prices hurt him and made him sore?

Depends on Whose Ox is Gored

Once a salesman offered me some canned soup 10 cent size for 30 cents the dozen. It was all asparagus soup of excellent quality, but it had not moved and this was a clean-up. I bought some and offered it special for 5 cents the can. It sold. The sale built trade for me. It was unquestionably below "regular." Would you call that price cutting?

Let us have in mind that the play of individual initiative must not be circumscribed, that the liberty of each to serve for less or serve better must not be curtailed, for from these, springs the true life of trade through wholesome competition. Thus the law of supply and demand works unhampered. What we should not want to give up ourselves we must not seek to take from others.

So, what is price cutting?

One kind is where a concern having many branches and large distribution depresses prices below the point where the business is self-sustaining to squeeze out competition. Such cutting has been subject to injunction in more than one instance. That is true piracy, illegitimate and should be stamped out everywhere.

Another kind is where goods are sold at a general level that does not admit of earnings sufficient to carry the business. That kind is very common. It provides its own ultimate remedy through the bankruptcy courts. Trouble is, it is slow. Its process upsets merchants who know what it costs them to operate. There are several ways to remedy this. And, after all, what you want is a remedy—that is really what you are interested in. All right: here goes.

The remedy I give has been used, so it is not mere theory. It is for each merchant to meet the cut prices of any merchant who makes a practice of attracting trade through prices so low as to impress you as "cut."

Let every one of you, or as many as may be interested together, watch every advertisement of the man you are after and meet his prices on the specials he uses. Note that I say meet. I do not say beat. Just set out in your store, prominently, but not too prominently, every item he advertises and mark it with exactly his advertised price. Never mind how close his figure is—whether it pays or not is immaterial. Just meet his figures.

If you make no great fuss about this, just marking at his figures, and naming those special prices quietly when your customers ask, immediately people will get the impression that there is, after all, nothing particularly "special" about his offerings and his "cuts" will fall flat. Such action should be preceded by a determined attempt to get that man into your association if you have one. If you have not one, get it at once. But make no threats—just be friendly.

The effect of such action as I suggest is not only prompt, but the cost to anyone is trifling. You put the cutter into the position of fighting all the rest of you. And what happens?

Either you kill him off, because he is operating on a basis that does not pay, or you fail, probably because he teaches you that your prices have been too high. Then you all prosper additionally through the added business that always follows vigorous merchandising along right lines. That will be good for all.

Quebec Is Restricting Use of Motor Trucks on the Public Highways

No Motor Trucks May go Outside Cities or Towns When the Capacity is More Than 5,000 lbs.— Montreal Wholesalers, Retailers and Manufacturers Make Objection

QUEBEC, (Special).—A bill for the restrictions of use of motor trucks on public highways throughout the province of Quebec has caused much discussion on the floor of the Provincial House recently. An important branch of commerce is vitally concerned in the bill and much opposition has come from owners and sales organizations of pleasure cars, as the government has increased the taxation on from 75 to 90 per cent. by the bill which is now before the House.

Municipal Control

An amendment was inserted in the bill to the effect that cities and towns in the province may control the weights of loads of motor trucks. This makes it unnecessary for Montreal to have an amendment to the bill as it is provided that no truck or commercial vehicle, which is the new technical term, may go outside of cities or town when the capacity is more than 5,000 lbs., or 2½ tons.

Not to Exceed 12 Tons

There is also a provision to the effect that the total weight of a commercial vehicle and its load shall not exceed 24,000 lbs. and the load shall be distributed in such a manner that pressure on a single axle shall not at any time exceed 16,000 lbs. This last clause, it seems, will take an engineer to enforce, and as far as the general user of trucks is concerned, he may be breaking the law without knowing it. Since many local retailers and most wholesalers are owners of trucks which deliver out of the city, the bill has caused much opposition in that quarter. The good roads along the St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec and west from Montreal, have built up a trade by truck which rivals the railways. Local wholesale grocers supply outlying towns direct from their warehouses by fleets of trucks. It is now, however, illegal for trucks carrying more than 5,000 lbs. to leave the city and the truck which with its load weighs more than 12 tons cannot be used in the city. Many of the trucks used in Montreal by local wholesale grocers are of a large and heavy type.

Some Trucks Cannot be Used

One wholesale grocery firm in Montreal, for instance, has sixteen trucks in service both inside and outside the city. They have eight 3½ ton trucks which each weigh, chassis alone, 8,000 pounds. The body, which is a heavy one weighs about 1,700 pounds which makes a total of 9,700 pounds for the truck alone. For city use this gives the wholesaler over seven tons to load, which is ample. These trucks cannot, however, be taken into the country unless they carry less than 5,000 pounds which is much below capacity. The 2½ ton trucks can be used freely in the country since, in grocery lines in particular, a full load rarely weighs 5,000 pounds, the capacity of the truck.

Wholesalers Not Anxious

Local wholesale grocers however show little anxiety about the new law. In the first place they decline to discuss it, as it appears in newspaper reports and are waiting until it receives its third reading and appears in the government statute. It may be that a different interpretation of the law may be given by government officials but it would now seem that as far as the grocery trade is concerned, the wholesalers have little to fear.

Much Outside Delivering

Owing to the many good roads out of the city there is much delivering by truck to the outlying towns. Last year some of the local wholesalers delivered as far as Three Rivers but this was found unprofitable and this year the orders to that city will go by the usual freight routes. Three Rivers is just on the outside of the eastern delivery and other towns will be fed as usual by trucks. As far as the western end of the island is covered by truck and up to the mountains in the north. The south side of the river to Granby is also covered by local wholesalers' trucks.

Retailers Object

The local retail grocers are fearing that the civic laws regarding the speed of delivery trucks of certain weights may mean many fines during the coming season, since it is intimated that Montreal will pass some drastic regulations with regard to speed. It is said that the speed of trucks or delivery vans of over one ton capacity will be four miles an hour, which local truck owners claim is ridiculous.

Making Delivery Boxes Safe From Petty Thieving

Montreal.—After some study and investigation for a solution for the problem of lost and mixed orders in delivery, Goodwin's Ltd., grocery department has adopted a plan which the manager, J. Bailie, claims is a success. For some time the grocery department was worried by many complaints from customers of missing articles in an order or the delivery of more goods than was ordered, which meant that someone else was short. Mr. Bailie discussed the matter with a number of large grocery firms in Canada, and the United States, but only found that they too had the same trouble. It seemed that the orders were mixed after they left the store. For a time the articles in each order were recorded and charged against the drivers who took the orders. This did not prove a solution, the mixing went on and it seemed unfair and impossible to charge the shortages against the drivers. It did however insure a little more care but when one hundred and fifty orders are piled in the one rig, very often one box dumps into another and the whole thing is hopelessly tangled.

Nail Lids On

Only a few weeks ago an idea was adopted which the grocery department now brands as a success. When an order is put up, it is checked off by an inspector and initialed. It is then put in an ordinary box, the kind that is collected in every grocery store, and passed on to a boy who puts a wooden lid on the box. These lids are made for the purpose so that they will just about fit every box. There are about two or three different sizes, since it is not essential that they absolutely cover the box. The boy nails the lid to the box with two wire-nail clasps or box fasteners. One is put in at each end and the box is ready for the driver. The delivery tag, the order form and the inspector's card are on one string which is attached to the inside of the box so that it will hang out.

Driver Opens Box

Each driver carries a pair of pinchers and when he delivers the order he pulls out the clasps, hands out the parcels and returns the box and lid to the store. This system has more than eliminated the trouble of lost articles. It enables a bigger load to be put in a wagon without fear of parcels being lost. The store management are enthusiastic over the success of the idea in solving their problem.

TO CARRY ON BUSINESS OF WHOLESALE AND RETAIL GROCERS

Sutton and Clarke, Limited, have recently been incorporated under the Ontario Companies Act, to carry on the business of wholesale and retail grocers and grain and provision merchants in all its branches, and of exporters, importers and warehousemen, and to acquire, manufacture, prepare, convert, store, exchange and dispose of groceries, foodstuffs and other wares and merchandise connected with such business. The company is capitalized at one hundred thousand dollars, and the head office is in the City of Toronto.

Westby & Westby, London, have purchased the business of J. A. Depotie and are discontinuing their business at 328 Hamilton Road.

Is Not Conducted on a Price Basis Only

Good Salesmanship, According to This Merchant, Depends as Much on Proper Display and Aggressive Selling Efforts as on Prices—Quality and Service Are Important Factors

THE question of the use of price tickets in window displays and throughout the store was discussed by several retail merchants in a recent issue. It is interesting to note that the wholesale trade is also interested in this subject, and although their experience is different to that of the retail merchant the opinions are nevertheless valuable, being based on observations of many years' standing in calling upon the retail trade.

"In regard to the pricing of articles in store and window, my experience, when calling upon the retail grocery trade for some sixteen years, would lead me to believe that each individual merchant must adopt a policy best suited to his purpose," stated A. H. Simpson, vice-president The Simpson Co., wholesale grocers, Guelph, Ont.

"Many merchants are so located," continued Mr. Simpson, "that their business is of a genuine service nature to its customers in the community, and except for the display and pricing of special lines such as quantities of fruits in season, or various other seasonable articles, which are required to move promptly, it has been found that it is not a beneficial method to price every article in the store with a ticket. This often leads to comparison with chain store organizations, who cut-rate many standardized articles to almost cost, for the purpose of drawing custom, and consumers are not as a rule sufficiently well posted to take into consideration the expense involved in the service rendered them, when making these comparisons.

Not Totally on a Price Basis

"Furthermore, good salesmanship in either retailing or wholesaling is not conducted totally on a price basis. The proper display and aggressive selling efforts, put behind the merchandise, for the purpose of obtaining a fair profit, is far more beneficial to manufacturer, dealer and consumer, than the conducting of business on a price basis which can be undermined at any moment the competitor decides to go one better. The tendency of stores to advertise their prices extensively is based on the assumption that price is the one factor to be considered in winning trade. This leads to competition in buying among competitors, with the result that every effort is put forth by the manufacturer and wholesaler to supply goods at a price which eventually affects the consumption because of inferior quality being substituted. As stated before, the efforts of these competitors in many cases are misdirected by their efforts to watch what the other fellow is doing and to go him one better.

"The best friend of the manufacturer and consumer today is the independent family grocer. His ambition and energies are directed along the lines of studying the individual wants of his customers, advising them and selling them goods that he can conscientiously recommend to hold and maintain and develop their custom. Trade built up in this manner is continuous and stable, and regularly insured through the channels from which the supplies are derived.

What Happens Under Price Plan

"Every manufacturer in the country knows that production costs can be greatly lessened by regular and capacity production. The educating of the public to always look for the cheapest price, keeps diverting the channels of trade from one store to another, with the consequent result that costs of manufacturer are increased, costs of wholesaling are increased, and costs of retailing are increased, when businesses have been built up on the price plan, so that at any minute a large volume of the trade can be diverted by competitors, willing to operate, possibly temporarily, on cheaper prices.

"Happy are those manufacturers and merchants today who have laid a stable foundation during the past years by securing a class of trade to whom quality and service are the important factors, which enable them to continue to operate successful businesses."

This Wholesale Grocery Was First Started Back in 1816, in the City of Halifax

THE oldest wholesale grocery house in all Canada is situated in Halifax, Nova Scotia. It is the present house of Bauld Bros., Limited, and dates since 1816. It has been located in the same building for the past 105 years and the same family name is still conducting the business.

HENRY G. BAULD, M.P.P.

Head of the oldest wholesale grocery house in Canada and vice-president of the Nova Scotia Wholesale Grocers' Association.

The firm was first known as William Bauld, later as Bauld and Gibson, then Bauld, Gibson & Co. Many years later, after the death of William Bauld, Sr., Henry G. Bauld, M.P.P., became a member of the firm, and is today the surviving member of Bauld, Gibson & Co. In 1900 the firm name was changed to Bauld Bros. At this time Henry G. Bauld, with his two brothers, took over the business, and the firm was later incorporated as Bauld Bros. Limited. Associated in the management are three sons of the partners. Today the fourth generation of Baulds is actively managing the business.

LACHINE, QUE., ADOPTS THE DAYLIGHT SAVING PLAN

Lachine, Que.—The City Council of Lachine decided the other night that the daylight saving plan would be adopted this summer as in previous years. The time for changing the clocks will be the same as for Montreal, to coincide with the scheme set by the Railway Association of Canada. The vote was so close that the Mayor was called upon to cast the deciding vote which resulted in the adoption of the bill.

The Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association

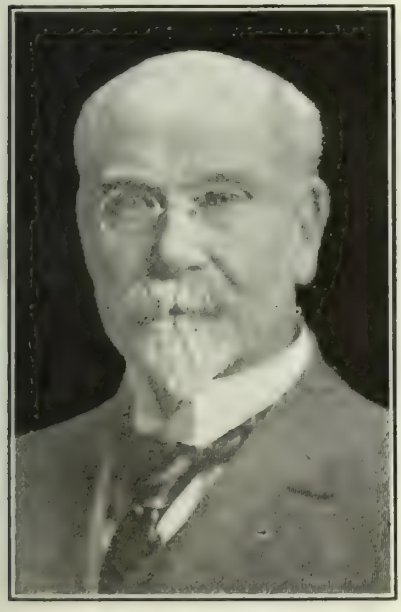
Organization Was Completed in August 1919—Ninety-five Per Cent. of the Wholesale Grocers of Canada Are Members—Hugh Blain, Toronto, the First President

Written by A. C. PYKE, Secretary of the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association

THE IMMENSE volume of business transacted, as well as the tremendous amount of capital invested and the large number of individuals employed in the wholesale grocery industry of assembling and distributing food products brought home to certain wholesale grocers in Canada the necessity and the wisdom of co-operation and co-ordination of effort through a trade association, with a central office, a headquarters with a secretary in charge whose entire time and efforts would be devoted to guarding the interests of its members and generally advancing their welfare.

Organized in 1919

A charter for such an association was sought from the Dominion Government and in June, 1919, a special act of the Dominion Parliament incorporating the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association, was passed and the association was formally organized in Ottawa on August 21st, 1919, for the purpose, among other objects, of "encouraging proper methods in the conduct of business, to promote harmonious and satisfactory relations among manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers, in order that food products may reach consumers at the lowest possible prices, and in the best possible condition and on broad and equitable lines to advance the welfare and uphold the traditions of the grocery trade and to maintain a high standard of business morals in the conduct thereof."



HUGH BLAIN

Of Eby, Blain, Limited, Toronto, now honorary president of the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association.

A. C. PYKE

Secretary of the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association—Mr. Pyke is also secretary of the Ontario Association.

The association was empowered to engage in the work of developing and promoting the import and export as well as the domestic grocery trade in Canada, by such means as may be considered desirable by the Association, provided that in the efforts of the Association to obtain these objects no action shall be taken that will operate in restraint of trade.

Subject to Investigations

Since its organization the Association has always endeavored to live up to these high ideals and although subject to searching investigations, first by the Special Parliamentary Committee appointed to enquire into the cost of living, and then by the Board of Commerce at the instigation of the Attorney-General of Ontario, its actions and activities have been fully vindicated and the charges against the Association have utterly collapsed.

The Attorney-General of Ontario, however, not satisfied with the Board of Commerce decision, brought action against our Association in the Supreme Court of Ontario before Mr. Justice Orde, the case being heard in April of last year. The judgment has not yet been rendered.

The first president of the Association was Hugh Blain, of Eby-Blain Limited, Toronto, who very ably and successfully directed the affairs of the Association for two years. Last year he was elected Honorary President and Armand Chaput, of L. Chaput Fils & Cie., Montreal, became president.

The members of the Association, desiring to show their appreciation of the services Mr. Blain has rendered to the wholesale grocery trade of Canada, are presenting him with a portrait of himself painted by E. Wyly Grier, a noted Canadian artist.

95 Per Cent in Association

Ninety-five per cent of the wholesale grocers of Canada are members of the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia each having their own provincial organization. Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are combined into one association called "The Prairie Provinces Wholesale Grocers' Association." Quebec Province has the "Montreal Wholesale Grocers' Guild," and the "Quebec Wholesale Grocers' Guild," and Ontario the "Wholesale Grocers' Association of Ontario."

All members of these Provincial Associations constitute the membership of the Canadian Association, whose head office is at 35 Front Street East, Toronto. Each province is represented on the Executive Committee of the Association.

Important At Present Time

Associated effort properly conducted is very necessary at all times but never more important than the present. It is the best means of standardization and benefiting an industry and the ultimate consumer. There are many matters requiring attention today that cannot be successfully handled individually; it must be through close co-operative effort.

The wholesale trade employ the only system which under modern conditions can properly supply consumers with their requirements. No other method can assemble, conserve and distribute the products of the world with an equal degree of efficiency and economy.

The established channels of distribution are from the producer or manufacturer to the wholesaler, from the wholesaler to the retailer and from the retailer to the consumer. In other words, the logical and practical system of distribution is through the wholesale and retail trade.

If these channels are beneficial economic factors, they should be reasonably protected.

The Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association was organized to obey the law and to voluntarily enforce as far as possible the observance of just and honorable business methods. We believe that by associated effort we can achieve the practice of higher ideals in business and elevate the trade to a position where it would merit confidence and respect in the public mind, which its importance and value to the public warrants and demands.

Canadian Exhibition Train to Travel France

Montreal.—The Montreal Chamber of Commerce at a meeting held recently adopted a resolution to be sent to the Federal Government, recommending the organization of a Canadian exhibition train to travel throughout France, in acceptance of an invitation of the French Government. As Canada did for France, the Republic offers to pay the cost of transportation and warehousing and to furnish the buildings for an exhibition of Made-in-Canada goods in Paris for the space of six months. This resolution came before the Chamber of Commerce in the form of a report signed by Henri Laureys, chairman of the committee for the trade expansion. The Montreal Chamber of Commerce invites the chambers of commerce and boards of trade of other cities to join in the support of the project.

Send Us Your Problems

CANADIAN GROCER receives on an average each week some 40 or 50 inquiries for information. This service to our readers is one to which they are entitled when they become subscribers to our paper.

The enquiries include a wide range of subjects and come from readers in all parts of Canada and frequently from outside of Canada. The other day, for instance, a subscriber in Nelson, B. C., wrote us for our opinion of the standing of a certain firm in Quebec province. He was intending purchasing some goods from this firm. As they had not had any previous dealings with them, and as they were not familiar with their standing and the quality of the products they made, they wanted further information.

A large importer in London, England, whose representative will soon be coming to Canada with a view to purchasing Canadian flour and salmon, wrote us in advance for information on the various flour millers and salmon packers. He is getting samples and prices so that when he reaches our office he will be able to conduct his business here more promptly.

Readers are invited to write us on any trade subject or ask where a certain product can be purchased or any one of the hundreds of things that come up from time to time in the retail and wholesale stores in Canada.

Trading Stamp Legislation

AN ACT HAS been given its first reading in the Ontario Legislature giving municipalities in the province the power to regulate the use of trading stamps or coupons by merchants or others. At the present time the law in regard to trading stamps is a Dominion Act, and infractions of the same are punishable under the Criminal Code. This new legislation that is going through the Ontario Legislature will make it easier for people in small places in the province to eliminate the practice. Merchants who are opposed to the use of trading stamps and coupons, can go before their municipal council and urge the passing of a by-law prohibiting the giving, selling or distributing of or the dealing with trading stamps, coupons or other similar devices, by any person engaged in trade or business or the receiving of them.

The by-law shall not apply, the Act stipulates, to a merchant or manufacturer who places in or upon packages of goods, or delivers to purchasers of goods sold or manufactured by him at the time of the purchase, tickets or coupons, which state upon their face the place of delivery thereof, and the cash or merchantable value of them, and are redeemable at any time, but only the merchant or manufacturer giving them and at the place where such goods were sold or purchased.

The passing of such legislation will be welcomed by the retailers generally who will heartily approve of anything that makes for greater restrictions on the use of trading stamps, and tends to eliminate them altogether.

Save the Containers

ON A TOUR of inspection through a manufacturer's plant a few days ago the writer's attention was drawn to a neat pile of empty sugar bags. Pointing to the bags the manufacturer stated "it certainly pays to look after empty containers. Those bags are bringing us fifteen cents each, and we have a bigger demand for them than we can supply."

We often wonder whether merchants realize the value of empty boxes, bags and barrels. These containers cost the merchant, indirectly, a great deal more than he can possibly expect to get back. But a large portion of the original cost can be got back if the containers are properly looked after.

Slashing open a bag of sugar or ripping the top from a case may be quicker, and save a fraction of a minute but if slashing in this manner decreases the value of the container, it hardly pays.

Recently it came to the writer's attention of a merchant who returned a shipment of cases and tins to a biscuit manufacturer, but they were in such a dilapidated condition that the manufacturer refused to give the merchant credit for them. These empty containers had been charged directly on the invoice and the merchant had the option of returning them at full price providing they were in good order. This particular shipment was valued at twenty-five dollars, so the merchant was out of pocket just that amount.

When Business Men Co-Operate

BUSINESS MEN'S Associations appear to be the order of the day. As a matter of fact, there seems to be an epidemic of such organizations. It is an epidemic, though, that leaves no ill effects. And it is an epidemic in which grocers are particularly interested by reason of the fact that they are usually among the leading figures in such movements. At the present time in Toronto there is a Business Men's Association in nearly every neighborhood. Meetings are held regularly and the problems encountered by the business men of the district are talked over and frequently made the basis of concerted action. For instance, the first questions taken up the other night by a newly-formed Queen Street Association was that of street lighting—in which every retailer in the district is interested. There are many questions of this nature about which nothing can be done unless all interested get together. Good fellowship, too, is engendered and the help-one-another spirit fostered. Merchants in other cities and smaller places might find life easier if they followed the example of Toronto's business men in this respect.

IN THIS ISSUE of Canadian Grocer instructions are given as to how the retailer should make out his income tax returns. Readers will do well to peruse this article carefully, and in spite of the fact that the making of these returns is not a new thing, many important points will be brought out in a study of the instructions.

* * * *

ANY PROPOSAL whereby legislation will be enacted, imposing a tax on the total turnover or total sales each month of all retail merchants, will meet with the disapproval of merchants generally. This suggestion, when made before, was strenuously opposed, and any revival of it at the present time will meet with the same opposition.

MANY A GROCER takes on too much territory simply because he dabbles in too many things that have nothing to do with his business. The result is often recorded in courts of bankruptcy.

DARWIN'S DOCTRINE of "the survival of the fittest" holds good in the grocery trade. Only the fittest can survive the competition; the unfittest don't deserve to survive.

CURRENT NEWS OF THE WEEK

Canadian Grocer Will Appreciate Items of News From Readers for This Page

Quebec

Fred G. O'Grady who for the past five years has been manager of Atlantic Sugar Refineries, Ltd., Montreal, has now joined J. J. Gibbons, Ltd., Advertising Agents and will be manager of the Montreal office.

Mr. Abramson, proprietor of the provision store at 867 St. Catherine St., West Montreal is moving his business to a new and larger store at 928 St. Catherine Street, where he will handle a larger line of groceries. At present this store is specializing in fruits, vegetables and meats.

O. Dejardin, who has been proprietor of the grocery store at 167 Bleury St., Montreal for thirty-two years, is next month retiring and selling out his stock. He gives as his reason for selling out the business the fact that his two sons have chosen professional careers and he is left alone in the store with only hi help.

Ontario

Daylight saving in Ottawa will commence on Sunday June 4, and will continue until Sunday, September 3.

John Ferguson, a commercial traveler for the Frederick C. Mathews Dairy Co., Detroit, dropped dead on a suburban train en route to Kingston, the other day.

Hon. P. C. Larkin, Canadian High Commissioner in London, sailed last week on the Empress of Britain for England, where he will take up his new duties.

C. F. Roland of the Coca Cola Co., Winnipeg is in Toronto just now, and expects to remain in Ontario for the next couple of months, in the interests of his concern.

The death occurred at Shannonville, Ont., on Thursday March 23, of A. Farnsworth, for many years proprietor of a general store in Shannonville. He is survived by his wife and five children.

A meeting of the retail grocers in the London district has been called for April 5 by Ald. Gordon Drake, president of the Retail Grocers' Association of London for the purpose of forming a co-operative system intended to bring farm produce to consumers fresher and cheaper than at present.

The death of George Duff, at the Mountain Hospital in Hamilton, occurred a few days ago, following a short illness. The late Mr. Duff was the proprietor of the chain stores known as the Duff stores in Hamilton. For many years he and Mrs. Duff were missionaries to China, and only returned because of the ill health of Mrs. Duff. Surviving are his wife, and four sons, as well as a brother Charles Duff, of the Duff Pork Packing Co., Hamilton.

Ottawa Grocers Again Elect A. E. Kelly President

Ottawa, March 27.—At the annual meeting of the Ottawa Grocers' Section of the Retail Merchants' Association a few days ago, A. E. Kelly was re-elected president for the ensuing year. The remainder of the old officers were also re-elected by acclamation. They are: First vice-president, T. A. C. Kennedy; second vice-president, B. Bambrick; secretary, C. Allen; treasurer, Duncan Bell; trustees, T. Bowman, S. Moreland and A. Phillips; auditors, L. Johnston and M. Ade. There were a number nominated for the executive committee, but as T. Bowman gave notice of motion that at the next meeting he would move to have the constitution amended so as to provide for eight, instead of five, on the committee, this matter was left over.

In response to an appeal from Basil Bambrick on behalf of the starving children of Russia, the association decided to authorize the sum of $25 being contributed towards the fund.

S. Moreland reported that the booths at the Pure Food Show this year would be all of uniform size—if the cost of making the alterations was not found to be too heavy. He stated that the innovation would give more satisfaction to exhibitors and provide a better show for the general public.

On recommendation of T. W. Collins it was decided to send the Pure Food Committee to Montreal to get some pointers from the Pure Food Show which is to be held in the Arena there on April 1.

A. Bennallick is Again Pres. of Guelph Grocers

Guelph, March 27.—The annual meeting of the Guelph Retail Grocers' Association was held on March 21st. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, A. Bennallick, re-elected; sec.-treas., E. J. Drake, re-elected; vice-president, G. K. Readwin; executive committee, L. Taylor, Mr. Chappel, C. C. Bordon, F. Stout, S. Tovell, C. E. Wiggins, and Harry Todd.

Government Wants Co-operation of Merchants In Dealing With Retail Problems

Hon. J. A. Robb, Minister of Trade and Commerce, Addresses Retailers in Ottawa—B. G. Crabtree, Retail Grocer in Dominion Capital is Re-elected Secretary

OTTAWA, March 27, (Special).—The re-election of B. G. Crabtree, retail grocer, to the office of secretary, and the championing of the cause of the retail merchant by Hon. J. A. Robb, Minister of Trade and Commerce, were features of the annual banquet and business meeting of the Ottawa branch, Retail Merchants' Association of Canada which was held in a local hotel last week. At the conclusion of the festivities, Henry Watters, treasurer of the Dominion Board, R. M. A., proposed a vote of thanks to the grocers "for their splendid contribution to the success of the entertainment." He explained that the grocers had been responsible for the music and certain other forms of pleasure. Retail merchants, two hundred strong, representing every class of retail merchandising in the city, attended the function, which was presided over by the president, E. A. Stephens.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce, after expressing his deep appreciation at the evident desire on the part of the Dominion Association to co-operate with the department of trade and commerce for the mutual welfare of the merchants and the Dominion, reminded his hearers that he had at one time served his apprenticeship to the trade, starting as errand boy and winding up as proprietor. He took issue with those who had on previous occasions, suggested the advisability of the elimination or curtailment of the retail merchants, or middlemen, as they had been designated, and said that they had not been responsible for the high cost of living, as had often been said. He submitted that the retailers of Canada had built up from the Atlantic to the Pacific a medium of exchange from the producer to the consumer which was of utmost necessity in order to provide for fair dealing in merchandising. It was the retailer who measured up the requirements of a community and established fair values between seller and buyer.

The minister said that the government was desirous of the co-operation of the retail merchants in dealing with their problems, and was of the belief that the development of trade in Canada could be better increased by the government's non-interference, and leaving it in the hands of business men who were capable of dealing with its many problems.

W. C. Miller, Ontario Provincial secretary of the Association, reviewed what the Ontario executive had accomplished and its future intentions with regard to legislation in its application to the retail trade. Other speakers were: Henry Watters, treasurer of the Dominion Board; E. M. Trowern, secretary of the Dominion Board, and C. A. J. Miller, manager for the North Western Mutual Retail Merchants' Insurance Underwriters.

The officers for the ensuing year are: President, E. A. Stephens; first vice-president, R. McGiffan; second vice-president, J. A. Larocque; treasurer, Frank Orme; secretary, B. G. Crabtree.

Letters to Editor

Editor Canadian Grocer

There has been considerable talking around that Punch Boards are prohibited, but I do not understand it rightly. Please give me some information in your paper, stating if they are only prohibited in certain towns or cities, or whether throughout the whole country.

Yours very truly

A Reader

Pembroke, Ont., March 16, 1922.

Editor's Note—The use of Punch Boards is illegal across the Dominion. We understand, however, that in some places it is not being enforced. In a recent issue of Canadian Grocer, the law as it applies to Punch Boards was taken up fully. If "A Reader" will kindly send us his name, we will gladly mail a copy.

JAM STANDARDS

Jam manufacturers have still the matter of enforcing government standards up with the Dominion Government and it is expected a definite understanding will soon be arrived at.

E. T. HIGGS
Of Charlottetown, P.E.I., secretary of the Prince Edward Island Wholesale Grocers' Association.

MICHAEL DWYER
Of John Tobin and Co., Halifax, N. S., and president of the Nova Scotia Wholesale Grocers' Association.

C. for Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Finds Business Better in Canada Than in United States, Great Britain or Europe

Economic Necessities in the Old Land Render it Still Impracticable to Drop the Many Substitutes That War Time Manufacturing Introduced

VANCOUVER, B. C. March 27. (Special).—H. Beach, formerly associated with the King-Beach Jam Co., and now manager of the Beach & Eakins Jam Co., of Victoria, B. C., has just returned from a business trip to the British Isles.

"I am giving you my considered opinion," said Mr. Beach to Canadian Grocer, "when I say that from all I could gather business is better here than in either the United States, Great Britain or any of the European countries. In Great Britain it will be some time before the various food manufacturers can get away from the conditions imposed by the war. In so many lines, the economic necessities of the times are making it non-feasible to drop the many substitutes that war time manufacturing introduced. In fact, the government is not only permitting the use of alternatives in many foods, but in the jam business with which I am directly acquainted in the Old Land, the government has recently circulated the jam manufacturers asking them to use 10% of glucose to keep the price as low to the people as possible.

"I was much struck by the indifference shown by employer and employee alike as to whether business was active or not. The workers seem quite indifferent whether they work or are laid off. The unemployment doles are undoubtedly responsible for that. The employers seem to have accumulated profits on which to frivol for a time—and seem inclined to do so.

"Throughout Canada I have found an eager anxiety to get going—and a measurable amount of movement that should inspire us all with courage and optimism. I was unable to attend the conference of jam makers that the Canadian government had called in Ottawa, but I sincerely hope that the standard of purity will not be lowered. There is no need in Canada for substitutes or adulterants of any kind, even though no loss in food value ensues."

Will Help the Sale of Canned Fish

With the exception of the beginning and end of the four year existence of the salmon, its life is spent in the depths of the ocean. It is during the time they commence their pilgrimage back to the waters of their birth that the salmon is caught for canning purposes.

The story of the salmon is intensely interesting. Readers of Canadian Grocer would do well to carefully read this story in next week's issue. In this same number there will also be stories on the lobster, haddie, sardine, herring and tuna fish. These stories are all of an educational character and should assist the merchant materially in putting over sales.

ASSOCIATED BOARDS OF TRADE FOR N. E. SASKATCHEWAN

At a meeting at Tisdale, Sask., of the boards of trade between Prince Albert and that point it was agreed to form an associated board of trade for northeast Saskatchewan to co-ordinate efforts for the development of the area concerned. The new body will affiliate with the provincial association.

W. J. Hindley Talks to Retailers in Spokane

Vancouver, March 27.—Members of the United Retail Merchants' Association of Spokane, Washington, banqueted at the Elks' Temple recently in commemoration of the first anniversary of the founding of their association in that city. About 250 retail merchants attended.

W. J. Hindley, Educational Director of the Washington States Retailers' Association addressed the gathering. Mr. Hindley is well known to the Vancouver and Victoria retailers having assisted on two occasions when organizing drives were under way.

WEEKLY GROCERY MARKET REPORTS

Statements from Buying Centres.

MARKETS AT A GLANCE

THE raw sugar market was easier during the week. After selling at 2½c the market declined on sales to 2¼c c. & f. New York which figures to 3.86c duty paid. Sales are reported to Canadian refiners of full duty sugars at 2.32½c c. i. f. Halifax and also at 2 3-16c c. i. f. New York for shipment to Halifax. The European market has turned dull after the recent activity.

Fair weather is reported from Cuba with two additional factories grinding making 179 in operation as against 191 for the same period last year and 190 in 1920.

A report by Willett & Gray on the amount of sugar destroyed by fire in Cuba for the months of December and January says: "Many of the trade appear to look at this in the wrong light. While the quantity of cane burned is quite large, the official Cuban Government figure amounting to 331,783 tons, this quantity applies to the cane only and when it is reduced down to sugar including the portion salvaged it will only amount to about 15,000 tons of actual sugar, which is a very small percentage in connection with the expected outturn of the crop."

The spot tea markets show further advances in quotations. This is the result of the higher values which have been ruling in primary markets for sometime past. Prices on spot stocks are still out of line with replacement costs and as the primary markets continue with higher tendencies the trade can naturally look for higher prices.

Cereals are steady in price but the market continues to rule with a strong tone. Ontario beans are decidedly scarce and higher prices are quoted.

The whole of the dried fruit list have stronger tendencies. This is particularly noticeable in prunes and evaporated apples, both of these lines showing advances during the week with a likelihood for further advances. Currants are also higher in some quarters.

Primary walnut and almond markets remain strong but as buying is of the hand-to-mouth character, the market is quiet but there is a strong possibility for higher prices later in the season.

Much interest is centered on the canned pineapple situation. It appears that the winter pack of Hawaiian sliced pineapple is fairly well absorbed and that the summer pack will be short. Opening prices on this are not yet announced but there appears to be considerable buying at open prices.

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, March 29.—The grocery market offers a strong front this week with few changes but in general a stable and much improved condition. Molasses and corn syrups are steady and no change is looked for. Teas have been steadily gaining strength and wholesalers are talking of an advance, not only in bulk but in package lines. Coffee is also gaining strength with a recent advance of one cent in primary markets. Canned vegetables are likely to take another jump but canned fruits are easy. The spice market is quiet without any change in local prices. Rolled oats are strong but as yet there is no change. Package goods are steady with a strong tone to package oats. In fresh vegetables there is a wide variety offered. Cauliflower, Spanish onions and carrots are higher in price. Cabbages, green and wax beans and beets are easier. There is a bigger demand for tomatoes this year than there has been at this season for many years. Lemons, grapefruit and pineapples are slightly higher in price with an improved demand.

CANNED VEGETABLES STRONGER

Montreal.

CANNED GOODS.—The canned vegetable market maintains its strong position especially corn, peas, and tomatoes. Supplies of these vegetables are limited and while some of the wholesalers advanced their prices last week another advance would not be surprising in the near future. Canned fruits remain easy and it is evident that local wholesalers are anxious to lighten stock on hand and to do this, in view of the limited demand for canned fruit there is likely to be a cut in prices.

EVAPORATED APPLES ADVANCE

Montreal.

DRIED FRUITS.—The striking feature of the dried fruit market is the further advance in evaporated apples making the price 20c. and 21c. per lb. with another advance likely before the end of this week. Prices at the evaporators have advanced another ½c. early in the week which has not yet had its effect on the wholesale market. Raisins are strong, but there is no change in price. Currants hold firm with only a fair demand. The demand for candied peels is limited. The prune market is in a strong position after a number of advances and it is evident that a high price will be paid for prunes before the season is out. On the whole the demand for dried fruits has been brisk during the past few weeks, but there is evidence of a dropping off temporarily in the demand. Local dealers are not at all worried by this, but state that the trade is only covered temporarily and buying will soon pick up.

TEA LIKELY TO ADVANCE

Montreal.

TEA.—The local tea market is even stronger than it has been in the past few weeks with likelihood of an advance almost any day. It would not be surprising to see packers of package teas advancing their prices and local wholesalers expect an advance in price on Ceylons and Indian teas at an early date. Local prices are under the cost of import at present. The Japan tea market is also strong, but an advance in price is not so evident as in black teas.

HIGHER PRICES ON WALNUTS

Montreal.

NUTS.—The only new feature of the nut market is the gaining strength of walnuts in primary markets. No change has yet been made locally. Peanuts are a little easier in the importers' hands, but wholesale prices remain unchanged. So far as the retail trade is concerned the demand for nuts is light, but as stocks held are also light the demand runs steadily.

NO CHANGE IN RICE LOCALLY

Montreal.

RICE.—The rice market continues to show strength in first hands, but no change in price is quoted locally. The tone of the market is strong, but with only a fair demand which hardly warrants an advance in wholesale prices. The buying of rice is limited to supplies for immediate requirements and a steady market at least may be expected.

SPICE MARKET QUIET

Montreal.

SPICES.—The spice market locally is quiet with a marked lack of demand which may be attributed to the season. Reports from primary markets indicate a steadier condition. In New York market prices are stated to be lower than quotations in primary markets on peppers, mace, nutmegs, red peppers and Ceylon cinnamon. This fact would indicate strength for the future in wholesale markets.

VARIETY OF NEW VEGETABLES

Montreal.

VEGETABLES.—There is a large variety of fresh imported vegetables on the market. Prices rule steady in most cases but cauliflower, carrots and Spanish onions are a little higher, chiefly on account of the big demand. New potatoes are in larger supply but the price is steady. Cabbages, beets, green and wax beans are easier in price. Tomatoes are in good supply but the demand is larger than it has been at this season for many years and the prices hold firm. This is the first time for many years that so many grocers have stocked tomatoes so early in the year.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, March 29.—There appears to be much confusion in sugar as prices quoted to the retail trade are below refiners' lists and considerable irregularity exists in the wholesale position. Ontario beans continue in a strong position with supplies fast becoming absorbed and prices higher. In the canned goods line much interest is centred on pineapple; supplies are scarce and there is a prospect for a short summer pack of Hawaiian sliced pineapple. Tomatoes and peas continue strong. Prunes and evaporated apples are in a stronger position with advances recorded. Currants are higher with a strong tone almost throughout the entire dried fruit list. Little buying interest is noted on nuts but primary markets continue to indicate a firm situation. Local prices on teas are advanced with primary markets continuing to work higher. Rices hold strong while the potato market continues easy.

ANOTHER ADVANCE IN BEANS

Toronto

BEANS—This market continues to grow in strength as the small supplies of Ontario beans are fast becoming absorbed. Few hand picked are available and are generally held at a premium. No. 1 lb. pickers are bringing as high as $4.40 per bushel.

INTEREST IN PINEAPPLE

Toronto.

CANNED GOODS—A great deal of interest is centered at present upon the canned pineapple situation. The winter pack of Hawaiian pineapple has been closely cleaned up and the summer pack is expected to be light, consequently there is a tendency for the opening prices, which are shortly to be announced, to be rather high. As a result of this situation some wholesalers are booked fairly heavy on sliced pineapple at open prices. Tomatoes and peas continue to indicate upward tendencies although in some quarters, independent packs are offered at bargain prices. Steam pack of canned apples are meeting with much favor and when it is considered that No. 10 tins of this pack contain approximately six pounds of solid fruit as against three pounds of the water pack, it certainly looks good value to the customer.

CURRANTS ADVANCE

Toronto.

DRIED FRUITS.—Almost throughout the dried fruit list, a strong tone prevails. Evaporated apples are showing signs of scarcity and under an active demand quotations are more strongly held with advances in some quarters. A heavy consumption of prunes has resulted in Coast stocks being practically cleaned up, a situation which has not occurred for many years this early in the season. Spot prices on prunes in most quarters show a slight advance but they are still below replacement values. Currants are slightly higher with the prevailing price averaging 15c on Filliatras and 16c on Patras although in some quarters a slightly lower price is quoted.

ANOTHER ADVANCE IN TEAS

Toronto.

TEAS.—It has been frequently reported under this heading that the trade could look for further advances in spot prices on teas. This advance is now registered which amounts to from 2c to 5c per lb. Spot prices are still out of line with replacement costs and the trade can therefore look for further advances before many weeks are past. In the primary markets, prices are gradually working higher and there is every indication for prices reaching even higher values than during the war period.

CONFUSION IN SUGAR

Toronto.

SUGAR—Refiners' list price remains at $6.90 Montreal basis or $7.24 delivered Toronto. This list price, seems to exist more in name than in fact as we hear of considerable difference in prices with much irregularity in the wholesale position. Wholesalers are quoting to the trade at $6.75 and it has been stated that even a lower price would be quoted by the end of the week.

RICES HOLD STRONG

Toronto.

RICES.—Southern markets continue with a firm tone and there does not appear to be any big volume of business passing but holders, however, do not appear to be anxious to unload. In the spot situation there is little change but there is some talk among the wholesale trade of higher prices on Blue Rose when fresh shipments arrive which were brought on the higher basis of values.

MANITOBA MARKETS

WINNIPEG, March 29.—Canned tomatoes and peas are active with quotations upward. Canned fruits are holding steady with the demand showing an improvement. Canned lobsters are showing signs of scarcity. The dried fruit situation remains unchanged. Cooking figs are in good demand. Beans continue firm and scarce. Split peas have advanced. There is no change in the local situation on nuts but foreign markets have a firmer tone. The Southern rice market is active while tapioca and sago are slightly easier. The sugar situation in Manitoba is in an unsettled condition. Olives are showing a firmer tone due to the short crop and the advance in Spanish exchange. Teas continue with upward tendencies. Oranges are higher and vegetables show little change.

STEADY TONE TO COFFEE

Winnipeg.

COFFEE—Latest reports from primary markets state that mild coffees have advanced and prices are now about in comparison with those of Santos. Santos coffee as well as Rio during the past month has advanced 1c. per lb. There is a good demand locally with no change in quotations.

CANNED VEGETABLES FIRM

Winnipeg

CANNED GOODS—Canned tomatoes and peas continue to show strength, and quotations are gradually moving upward. Canned fruits show no change, but a slight improvement in the demand is noted. There is a good demand for canned salmon and sardines. Spot stocks of canned lobsters are practically exhausted and as winter pack will not arrive on this market much before the middle of April prices look higher.

SPLIT PEAS ADVANCE

Winnipeg.

CEREALS—Split peas have advanced 15c per bag, now quoted at $7.65 per 98 lb bag. Some slight concessions have occurred on rolled oats due largely to the desire of the miller to sell. Actual conditions of the market do not warrant any lower figures than quoted. Cornmeal is in good demand. Beans continue strong and practically all now available are of foreign growth. The prices that will likely prevail between now and the end of the season will likely be $4.00 per bushel.

NO CHANGE IN FLOUR

RICE MARKET ACTIVE

Winnipeg.

RICE—The market in the south continues strong and active. It is not likely there will be any declines until the new crop is available. Tapioca and sago on the primary markets are slightly easier and with the new arrivals in about three months time quotations will likely be about 1c per lb less than the present.

Quebec the Home of Pure Maple Syrup

This Province Produces More Maple Syrup Than All the Other Provinces Combined—Lack of a Bigger Market Results in Production Showing Decrease—How Quebec Merchants Get Market For The Product

By Staff Correspondent Canadian Grocer

QUEBEC, Mar.27.—One of the feature productions of the province of Quebec is maple syrup and sugar, for which it is noted not only in America but in Europe. The importance of the maple sugar industry is scarcely realized in many parts of Canada, where it has long since ceased to be carried on. According to Dominion statistics, the production of maple sugar and syrup steadily increased from 1850 to 1890, but since that time it has quite as steadily decreased. In the year 1891, 22,500,000 pounds were produced, but in 1920 the production dropped to less than 20,000,000 pounds, and last year was even lower. Even though a decrease in production is noticed, the industry still bulks large. Producers state that the reason for the decrease is not that Canada has not the ability to produce, or that the maple groves have been destroyed, but that the demand and the consumption has not increased and a certain amount of interest has been lost. The truth of the matter is that the product is not as popular with the Canadian people as it should be or as it could be, had it the publicity that some imported products get.

Production Greatest in Quebec

The industry is confined in Canada to Quebec, Ontario, and some parts of the Maritime provinces. Quebec produces more than twice as much as Ontario and the Maritime provinces together. Its production recently was 14,300,000 pounds, while the same year Ontario produced a little over 5,000,000 pounds. Yet producers state that Quebec is not producing half that could be produced if there were a market for the whole amount. When it is considered that the whole "sugar-off" season barely lasts five weeks, it can be appreciated how intense the work of production must be. Quebec still has vast areas of maple forests and groves yet untapped.

The early settlers learned from the Indians the art of sugar making and indeed for many years followed their old crude methods. Even yet the primitive methods are used in some of the back country parts with the result that an inferior dark syrup is produced with poor keeping qualities. With the advent of the more cleanly and economical methods, for there is much waste with the old careless hacking of the trees and drainage, a better grade of syrup has been produced and the care in boiling has given maple syrup new keeping quality. Furthermore the increased cost of labor has been met by an ingenious inventor who has taken advantage of the law of gravitation. Where the profile of the sugar grove will permit, pipe lines are laid from central collecting tanks to the storage vat in the sugar plant. Thus the sap flows by itself to where evaporation takes place.

While there has always been a certain amount of romance about the "sugaring off" in the woods over a big fire built around an iron cauldron, the more up-to-date methods have much improved the quality of the syrup, and its color is lighter since it is free from the smoke, ashes and dirt that collect in the open boiling. Then, too, more care and science is involved in the preparation which improves the keeping quality.

It is safe to infer that in Canada alone there are many thousands who have little knowledge of the maple products. Freight charges and the limited centres of production are mainly responsible for the meagre distribution.

A producer in Compton County, Quebec, who uses covered buckets on the trees and takes every precaution to make his product high-class, sells practically all the production of a thousand trees in the city of Sherbrooke alone. It took a little time and energy to develop the market, but once developed, it remains and now grows by itself. This grower never takes less than $1.25 a gallon for his syrup and never lacks a market. Another producer keeps a record of people who have moved wetsward and sends them a price list every year. He has made use of the mailing list of a local paper from which he gets the names of those who, it is natural to believe once lived in the maple producing districts. From this mailing list good results have been obtained, for in such a line as maple syrup one person will pass the address of the producer of a good syrup on to another. This merchant ships to England, France and even to China. This product deserves and repays an extra effort put behind sales.

By Products Little Known

Perhaps it is little known that vinegar is a by-product of maple syrup. It is estimated by experienced sugar makers that from 25 to 30 gallons of vinegar can be obtained from the fermentation of the by products of the tapping of 1,000 trees. This vinegar is of fine quality and as many sugar makers themselves do not know it, there is considerable waste every year. Sugar-sand, chemically known as nitre, which is the basic part of malic acid, brings a good price and is the sediment left after the boiling of maple sap.

45,000 CANS OF VEGETABLES DESTROYED

More than 45,000 cans of vegetables, the property of the Oshawa Canning Company, were recently seized and destroyed at the factory at Oshawa, as being unfit for consumption. Such was the information given to Canadian Grocer by J. H. Dagar, Dominion Food Inspector. The goods destroyed consisted mostly of catsup, apples and peas.

BY THEIR TIES YE SHALL KNOW THEM

On the first of April, representatives of Gunns, Limited, Toronto, will wear a silk necktie of yellow and blue, the company's colors. This is something new as far as business houses are concerned, as the idea is usually confined to sporting organizations.

Oppose Regulation Calling on Retailers to Advertise the Origin of Eggs

Advertising Committee of the Grocers' Section R. M. A. Discuss Egg Resolutions—Approve of Proposal to Have Imported Eggs Distributed in Original Packages

OTTAWA, March 27. — At a meeting of the Advisory Committee of the Grocers' Section of the R. M. A. of Ottawa, the various resolutions adopted at the egg-marketing conference, were discussed and dealt with. No action was taken with regard to the resolution which called upon grocers to advertise publicly the origin of eggs used in the manufacture of cakes, etc., other than to refer it to the Bakers' Section. Privately the members were all strongly opposed to the regulation and are prepared to back up any agitation against it.

In Original Packages

With regard to the motion: "That imported eggs be distributed in the original packages marked showing the country of origin," it was explained that the argument put forth regarding this resolution, at the egg-marketing conference, was that the eggs coming from the United States were packed in flimsy crates and that the express people would not accept them unless they were re-packed. The intention is that this regulation should only apply to case lots. The resolution was approved by the committee.

The retailers at the conference had dissented from voting on a motion which provided for all invoices covering the delivery of foreign eggs in shell or otherwise. stating the country of origin. Mr. Crabtree explained that this was the first resolution that was put before the conference, and that the retail representatives had objected because it did not deal at all with the grading of eggs.

The committee unanimously approved the resolution: "That no person operating any cold storage plant shall receive eggs for storage or shall store eggs therein without an accompanying certificate in writing from the owner of such eggs, certifying that said eggs have been candled and all bad and unsound eggs removed."

Grading of Fruit

The proposed regulations for the grading of fruit were referred to the Dominion Committee. Mr. Crabtree stated he understood that it was arranged at the recent fruit conference that the full imperial pint and imperial quart should be used in place of the two-fifths boxes formerly used.

The committee went on record as favoring legislation to permit the sale of oleomargarine over a further period of twelve months. The matter was referred to the Dominion Committee for its approval.

Amendments to the Cold Storage Warehouse Act

Ottawa, March 27, (Special).—A bill providing for several amendments to the Cold Storage Warehouse Act, introduced in the Senate, by Senator Bradbury, was the first of the present parliamentary session. The provisions, some of which are similar to those approved at recent conference in Ottawa, include, among other things, "that no article of food which is tainted or otherwise unfit for human consumption shall be placed in cold storage."

Articles of food placed in cold storage would be required to bear labels showing the date on which the article was manufactured, killed, packed or cured and also the net cost on the date of storage. The date of removal from storage would require to be indicated in red letters at least half an inch high.

No article of food would be placed in cold storage unless there was attached to it or to the package containing it, a label complying with the provisions of the section which would include the printing in black letters and figures: (a) a description of the article; (b) the name and address of the firm or person on whose behalf the article is to be stored; (c) the date of killing, taking, packing, manufacturing or otherwise procuring or producing as the case may be; (d) the net cost of the article on the date of storing per pound, dozen, package or other unit of price.

Under the caption: Preservation of Label and Particulars, the bill provides that "when an article of food is placed in cold storage. the manager or other person in charge of the cold storage warehouse shall cause to be plainly stamped or printed on the label the following particulars: (a) the number of the license under which the warehouse is operated; (b) the name of the firm or person operating the warehouse; (c) the date on which the article was delivered for cold storage; (d) the date on which the article was placed in cold storage.

Senator Bradbury would also make it compulsory that cold storage articles shall be indicated as such when offered for sale, and that managers of storage warehouses shall report monthly showing amounts of food held, and also the net cost of such.

Situation in Canned Goods on the Old Country Market

J. E. Ray, Canadian Trade Commissioner in Manchester, England, sends the following interesting report to the Department of Trade and Commerce at Ottawa on Canadian canned goods:—

"It is learned from a number of firms interviewed to-day that the demand for canned fruits and vegetables is satisfactory if viewed in the light of the not too robust condition of trade generally in foodstuffs.

"An opportunity was presented to the writer to inspect a consignment of canned raspberries received from a shipper in Eastern Canada. The flavour was excellent and the juice satisfactory in colour, but the fruit itself lacked an appetizing look when turned out of the tin. The general impression is that the raspberries of Eastern Canada are much softer than those grown in British Columbia, and if a stronger variety cannot be grown there is little hope of sales in Manchester and district. One firm in the city have experimented with raspberries from both sections of Canada, and they are firmly convinced that an excellent trade is possible with the product of British Columbia, but they will be afraid to test any further shipments from Eastern Canada.

Canned Tomatoes

"There is still a fair demand for Canadian tomatoes, but of course they continue to suffer by comparison with the Italian brands. Fortunately, there is a market for both qualities and, as Canadian prices are lower to-day than those of their Italian rivals, sales do not hang fire on the question of quality.

Canned Peas

"Some of the firms interviewed were enthusiastic in their praises of the quality of Canadian peas, compared with those put up by the French and Italians. Unfortunately buyers are impressed first, if not mainly, by the colour, and in that respect the Canadian product suffers by comparison with the brands aforementioned. Canadian packers are quite familiar with the obstacle preventing their adoption of colourings, and so long as that impediment exists their product will always suffer on the British market in competition with foreign packers, who are able to please the eye of the purchaser before appealing to his palate."

Damage to the extent of $75,000 was caused by a fire that visited Smiths Falls, a few days ago. It started in the C.P.R. sheds, and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the Robin Hood Co., of Montreal, are the principal losers.

Produce, Provision and Fish Markets

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, March 29.—Hogs have advanced with a keen demand from packers. Smoked meats, in sympathy with hog markets, are stronger. The approach of Easter has created a bigger demand for smoked and cured meats. Cooked meats show some improvement in demand with the mild weather but prices are unchanged. The butter market has advanced with a bigger demand for Canadian creamery and less New Zealand butter offered. Eggs are in bigger supply but also in greater demand and the prices show firmness. Cheese is unchanged in wholesale circles. Some of the cheese factories are already open and the prospects are for a big make this season. There is no change in fish prices. Maple syrup prices show an easy tendency with a big make and prices are dropping.

STRENGTH IN BUTTER

Montreal

BUTTER—The strength in the local butter market is more pronounced and prices show an advance of 1½c to 1c per lb. This is attributed to the somewhat limited supply of the better grades of Canadian creamery butter on spot and also the increased demand. Shipments of New Zealand butter have not been as large as they were a few weeks ago and the demand for domestic butter shows an increase. The export market for butter also shows an improvement which lends a strong tone to the domestic market.

CHEESE—There is little activity in the cheese market, but a better export situation is evident which lends a firmer tone to the market. The demand for the local trade is fair with wholesale prices holding. Owing to the favorable weather that has prevailed, the cheese factories in some sections of the country have already opened and the prospects are for a large make this season.

EGGS—Egg prices are showing more stability without any change in the past week. Supplies are much heavier but the demand at the lower prices has offset this. The weather has been favorable for an increased production and Canadian eggs are in good supply, therefore importations of American eggs have fallen off.

HOG PRICES ADVANCE

Montreal.

FRESH MEATS—Prices paid locally for selected light weight hogs, weighed off cars show an advance of 75c per cwt. with a much stronger market and the basis is now $14.25 per cwt. Receipts locally have not been large and the demand on the part of packers is keener. Prices on fresh cuts of pork are strong with the likelihood for an advance late this week should the hog market hold up. The demand for fresh pork is only fair.

MAPLE SYRUP RUN HEAVY

Montreal.

MAPLE SYRUP—The run of maple syrup so far has been larger than that of last year and on account of less rainy weather during the past month the quality in the Southern Counties shows a big improvement. Producers expect a bigger demand this year than in many years past and prices show an easier tone. Last week the price paid for maple syrup in the country dropped to $1.25 per gal. and it is expected to drop further. Prices in the city vary considerably depending on quality and upon the reputation behind the producer. On the market bulk maple syrup is sold at $1.75 per gal., but other grades run as high as $2.00 and $2.25 for an imperial gal. Prices may be expected to be easier than last year, but at the same time it must be remembered that old stocks are well cleaned up and there is a keen demand.

GOOD DEMAND FOR FISH

FISH—The fish market enjoys a good steady demand through the Lenten season with a good supply coming to the market and prices hold steady. The mild weather has made the handling of fresh fish more difficult and some change in prices may reult.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, March 29.—Under heavier offerings the hog market developed a weakness during the closing days of last week's market and as we go to press the packers are bidding a lower price for the balance of this week. Lard, shortening, cooked meats and bacon have a steadier tone. Butter is quite firm and under a good demand from the United Kingdom, there is a tendency for the strength in this market to be maintained until grass butter is available. Eggs are steady with quotations firmly held, but dealers are not inclined to overload apparently not willing to be caught with a heavy stock when the season of heaviest production is at hand. There has been an improvement in the demand, locally, for cheese particularly of September make. Fish is steady while the poultry market is quiet.

BUTTER MARKET FIRMER

Toronto.

BUTTER—The butter market has a firm tone with quotations generally advanced one cent per pound. The cause of the strength in this market is attributed mainly to the movement to the United Kingdom. Another factor, is that second grades are becoming cleaned up and the spread in prices between the lower and higher grades is considerably narrower. No.1 grades are quoted at 40c to 41c and on No. 2 around 38c per lb.

CHEESE MORE ACTIVE

Toronto.

CHEESE—An improvement was noted in the local cheese market during the week. Dealers report a fairly heavy movement in September cheese, chiefly from the retail trade who have a demand for old cheese and who are laying in a supply of the September make for ageing purposes to supply their trade during the Spring months. General market conditions, however, are unchanged with quotations holding fairly steady.

FIRM EGG MARKET

Toronto

EGGS—Quotations are generally one cent per dozen higher than a week ago. Deliveries of eggs are steadily increasing but the demand for consumption is also fairly heavy so that at the present time there is little surplus. Quotations to the retail trade are firm at 31c to 32c per doz.

HOGS UNSETTLED

Toronto.

FRESH MEATS—The higher market for hogs during the past couple of weeks had the effect of attracting to the market a larger shipment of hogs with the result that there were more appearing than the market could readily absorb. The big packers were therefore able to put into effect the lower prices which they have been endeavoring to do since the market recovered the higher values a few weeks ago. As we went to press last week the market appeared fairly strong but under heavier receipts the week closed with the market weaker on the fed and watered basis of $13.75. As we go to press packers are bidding 75c under this figure. Cattle, calves and lambs held fairly steady. Dressed meats show little change in quotations.

But this is the only way—to test things and fight 'em out. Nobody can help you except yourselves. You have got to fight your own battles. Help invariably comes from within, for it cannot come from without.

And come to think of it, probably this is the only definition of a price-cutter: the one who gets on the average less than it costs him to replace his goods and makes a profit!

Margins Protected by Manufacturer

This entire question brings up that of prices protected by the manufacturer. That is a thing of which I have been an advocate for many years. I feel that any manufacturer who so elects should be at liberty to name the resale price on his goods and follow them through every channel to the end that his price be maintained.

I seek not to cast aspersion on the United States courts when I say I cannot follow some of their recent reasoning in this connection. For why should a maker be granted the right to refuse to sell a cutter and be denied the right to demand that said cutter shall not be supplied by an intermediary?

As for any danger that freedom of trade would be curtailed by this, that I consider a bogey too nebulous for serious consideration. I think, in fact, that were such a law passed and enforced, plenty of manufacturers would get busy making "unprotected" goods and advertising them. For competition will not be killed.

Finally, remember that business will have troubles always; that success is always to those who can use their brains to overcome them.

SMALLER JAPAN RICE CROP

The latest estimate of Japan's 1921 rice crop places the production at 16,964,100,000 pounds of cleaned rice, compared with 19,948,874,000 pounds realized from the 1920 crop. This estimate is smaller than that made the latter part of November, 1921, by approximately 157,078,000 lbs. The average production of rice during the five-year period, 1909-1913, was 14,008,547,000 pounds.

In the Southern markets the rice situation has stronger tendencies. The amount held is not considered large and although buying is by no means large, holders of rice are not overly anxious to sell at present prices.

THE "WANT" AD.

The "want ad." has grown from a little used force in business life into one of the great necessities of the present day.

Business men nowadays turn to the "want ad." as a matter of course for a hundred small services.

The "want ad." gets work for workers and workers for work.

It gets clerks for employers and finds employers for clerks. It brings together buyer and seller, and enables them to do business though they may be thousands of miles apart.

The "want ad." is the great force in the small affairs and incidents of daily life.

MAPLE TREE PRODUCERS ASSOCIATION, LIMITED

Proprietary Article Price Number of Great Value

Many complimentary references have come to us about Feb. 10 issue of Canadian Grocer which contained the extensive price list on branded lines of food and allied products. Following are a few of the many letters received:

Find It a Ready Helper

Canadian Grocer:

We wish to take this opportunity of commending you on your excellent issue of Feb. 10 containing a complete price list of groceries. We have referred to this issue on a number of occasions and have always found it a ready helper.

J. HOCKIN CO., LTD.

Dutton, Ont.

Step in Right Direction

Canadian Grocer:

At this time when prices are changing and getting adjusted, your list of proprietary articles in Feb. 10 issue is appreciated. I think it is a step in the right direction. Hoping you will carry on the good work and wishing Canadian Grocer the success it deserves.

E. J. DRAKE.

Guelph, Ont.

Uses as Reference Number

Canadian Grocer:

We found Feb. 10 issue Canadian Grocer very interesting. Have placed it amongst those we keep.

NORTHWAY GRANT CO.

Orillia, Ont. Per George B. Cunningham.

Always Looking for New Lines

Canadian Grocer:

I was interested in your Price Number of Canadian Grocer for a number of reasons. I cannot say that from the standpoint of checking prices it is of much use to a grocery business like ours, that buys on a large scale, but I took the number and went over the different lines with our grocery traveler. I was interested in the variety of lines quoted. We are always looking for good, new specialty lines that we can get behind and push.

C. L. GRANT.

761 St. Catherine St., Montreal.

Values the Accurate Information

Canadian Grocer:

Re your issue of Feb. 10. I cannot say too much in its favor as it will be of great use to me not only for stock-taking but at all times for keeping us posted accurately on current prices.

F. W. HUTTON.

St. Marys, Ont.

Live Protection for Retailers

Canadian Grocer:

The writer has been in touch with some of our customers the last few days who are prominent in the grocery business at different points, and we think it only right to tell you how much the proprietary price list in the issue of February 10 is appreciated by them. I heard different remarks that made me feel that the retail grocers viewed it as a special and live protection to their interests.

T. KENNY & CO., LTD.

Sarnia, Ont. (Wholesale Grocers).

A Most Helpful Issue

Canadian Grocer:

The Price Issue of Canadian Grocer, published on February 10, is a most helpful one for the grocery trade. I have put my copy away on file for future reference. I have gone over it once carefully and that has only served to show me how much it can help me in the future.

W. J. BROWN.

888 St. Catherine St., Montreal.

Using as a Reference

Canadian Grocer:

That Price Issue of Canadian Grocer must have meant a lot of work. It shows it. I have put it away carefully for future reference. It is most helpful in more ways than you may guess. Whatever you people tackle you generally do it thoroughly.

JAMES A. HEWSON.

Montreal.

We have decided to publish another Proprietary article issue in a couple of months in view of the practical value of Feb. 10 to the trade.

$100 for a name—for a match

WE want a name for our new Match which will shortly be marketed from the most Modern Match Factory in Canada.

We want a name that will help to sell, and advertise our matches. It should be short, easy to remember and easy to pronounce.

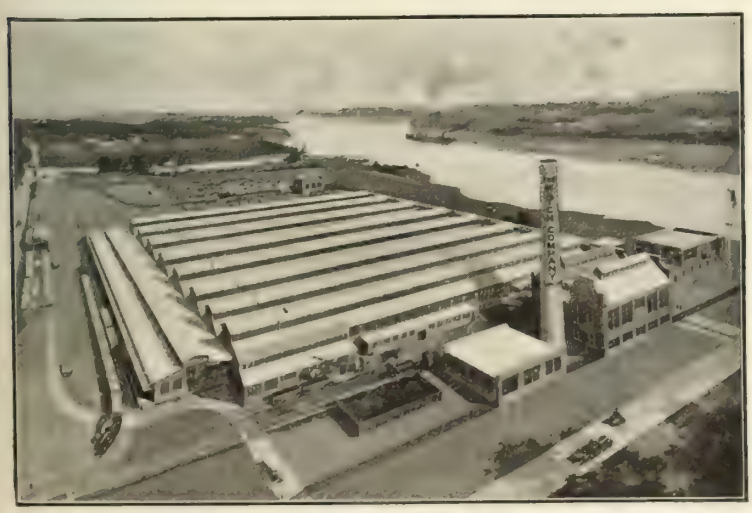
A grand prize of $100.00 is offered for the best name submitted; $50.00 prize for the second best name and $25.00 prize for the third best name.

The following facts about our new Match may help you in "coining" a name for it:

It is square in shape and stronger than ordinary matches because it contains more wood. It is made from tough woods—aspen and bass.

Being square, it burns freely and is easier to hold in the fingers when striking.

The square shape holds the head on securely. The heads do not fly off, and there is no afterglow.



The Match Company, Limited, Plant at Berthierville Quebec, the finest and most modern in Canada.

The rules of this Contest are very simple:

(1) The Contest is open to all Retail Grocers and Retail Grocers' Clerks in Canada and other employees.

(2) Should more than one contestant submit the names which the judges select as the winning names the prize money will be equally divided.

(3) All contestants must sign their own names and business addresses plainly on the sheet on which their suggestions are submitted.

(4) Each contestant may submit as many names as he wishes, provided the suggestions are received before April 30th.

(5) All names sent in to be and remain the property of The Match Company, Limited, and to be available for their use at their convenience.

Contest Closes April 30, 1922.

The judges will be The Editor "Canadian Grocer" and J. J. Gibbons, Limited, advertising agents, Toronto. Their decision to be final.

Send your names to A. W. Hugman, Sales Manager.

Good Judgment!

Your customer demands ST. CHARLES MILK because of its universally known purity and high quality—that is good judgment.

You as a merchant build your milk business on ST. CHARLES—that is good judgment because you are building on a firm foundation.

The good judgment of your customer and yourself translated into sales means good business and good profits — both permanent — because ST. CHARLES MILK is in itself good judgment.

The recipe of the good housewife calls for ST. CHARLES—the recipe for a successful milk business calls for ST. CHARLES.

WAYAGAMACK PURE KRAFT

Has No Rival.

Because of its strength a light-weight sheet gives as much service as inferior grades of wrapping paper twice the weight.

Therefore it is the most economical paper for wrapping purposes.

Whether used in the form of bags, envelopes, notion bags and paper containers of all descriptions or simply as a wrapping paper, it will give more satisfaction than any other paper used for the same purpose.

Its appearance is so attractive that it acts as a standing advertisement for the merchant who uses it.

Wayagamack Pure Kraft

MONO SERVICE CONTAINERS

With Mono Service Containers, hundreds of packers and manufacturers have materially reduced their packing and carriage costs.

Mono Service Containers are light, strong, durable, hygienic, compact and economical. They are designed for successfully packing foodstuffs, confectionery, etc., for either limited periods or indefinitely. Over 20,000,000 are used by packers of foodstuffs, grocers, confectioners, etc.

With "Mono Service" lighter packing cases can be used, thereby reducing carriage costs materially while they also eliminate all expensive and time-wasting re-handling of returned containers for washing, labeling, etc.

Retailers find them handy and economical for Mincemeat, Peanut Butter, etc.

Mono Service Containers are just the thing for quickly and economically putting up bulk lines such as pickles, peanut butter, oysters, mincemeat, etc. Order a trial supply.

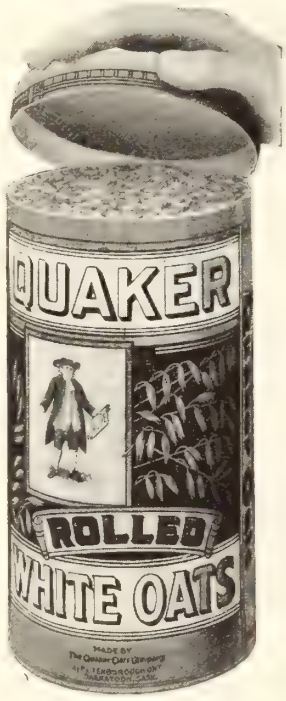
QUAKER OATS

EAT A GOOD SUBSTANTIAL BREAKFAST



This is the advice given to us by Dr. Addington Bruce, a physician with an international reputation. Dr. Bruce says that too many people bolt a breakfast of toast and coffee. The result is that by lunch time, hunger forces them to eat a heavy dinner, and then there is the drowsy feeling in the afternoon. This applies particularly to office men and women, clerks in stores, stenographers, etc.

The morning meal should be a substantial one, and should be eaten slowly.

is above all others, the nation's breakfast food. It is in the interests of every Canadian grocer to display, sell and push it.

Make the most of this healthy, wholesome food while it is easy to sell.

Two Sides to the Profit Question

If you permit the customer to govern the situation, she will buy only a few oranges and some sugar once or twice a year from you—if she makes her own marmalade.

More often she will buy her fruit from the fruit stores instead of from her grocer.

—and your profits are bound to be small.

—on your sugar sales practically no profit at all.

If you endeavor to govern the situation you will sieze every opportunity to tell her that she will actually save money by buying Shirriff's from you. Experiment has proved this true.

The result is you will sell Shirriff's to her the year around.

—and your profits are bound to be larger.

—if you sell Shirriff's you get your profit on the sugar in the marmalade.

Shirriff's has been a household favorite for seventeen years. Once you persuade your customer to try Shirriff's she will not want to make her own any more.

Selling more groceries with the aid of a pump

Ever stop to consider how a curb gasoline pump can help you sell more groceries? Sounds like stretching a point, but there is a connection and a close one, too.

A gasoline pump on the curb in front of your store will stop a great many women drivers who need gasoline. While you are filling the tanks of their cars, you can suggest the purchase of necessary groceries, you can tell your customer about special sales.

You will be surprised at the amount of groceries which you can sell in this way. And customers always buy more when they come in person than when they telephone.

And it works the other way, too. Purchasers of groceries can many times be sold a filling of gasoline in addition to the groceries which they come to buy. Your store will become favorably known because of the service you can give automobilists.

The sales of gasoline alone will more than take care of the investment on the pump. And the profits which you will make from the added sales of groceries will be so much extra money for you.

Most motorists already know the good qualities of Wayne Honest Measure Pumps. And many more are learning about them from our national advertising and from their own satisfactory experiences with Wayne Pumps. When you write, ask for Bulletins 205-CG, 207-CG, 276-CG, 280-CG and 302-CG.

Christie, Brown Co., Limited,
202 King Street, East, Toronto, Ontario.

Dear Sir:—We were actually the first to introduce the Christie display Cabinet in Hamilton, which was instrumental in DOUBLING OUR BUSINESS, and were so well pleased with it that we immediately ordered it replaced by a 56 sectional case and the same case is doing business without any more outlay than the cost of revarnishing from time to time.

Our sales were perceptibly increased by the introduction of the new cabinet and we have enjoyed a substantial increase with each succeeding year.

FOR CANADIAN MANUFACTURE WE FEATURE CHRISTIE'S EXCLUSIVELY.

The cabinet is attractive and makes for orderliness in display which is impossible to obtain with a MISCELLANEOUS OUTFIT OF ODDLY SHAPED AND DILAPIDATED TINS such as occasionally furnished, moreover it appeals to patrons for the clean and sanitary manner in which the biscuits are kept.

The interchangeable fronts are clean and may be readily removed and replaced.

Our selling price is plainly marked on each front so that the interior tin may be constantly removed but the prices remain displayed.

The high priced biscuits are shown along the top rows and the others are arrayed in rotation according to price.

Yours truly,

Would Advance Cost of Food Products

Any Increase of Minimum Car Weights Would Result in Higher Prices for Foodstuffs—Representatives of Canning Concerns and Wholesale Grocers Meet Classification Committee of Freight Association in Regard to Proposed Increases

MONTREAL, April 3:—The representatives of many canning firms in Canada and the United States, who on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week met the special classification committee of the Canadian Freight Association, dealing with classification No. 17, decided to leave the discussion over until the wholesale grocers have had an opportunity to meet the committee and express their views on the proposed increase in minimum car weights and other changes. The meeting was held in the offices of the Canadian Freight Association.

The main trend of the discussion was the evidence brought by the packers, to the effect that an increase in the minimum car weights on canned goods would virtually mean an increase in freight rates, and consequently increase the cost of living. This in view of the present trade conditions would only make it all the more difficult for the wholesalers to place orders for car lots and so hurt the trade all around.

Higher Prices to Consumer.

It was the unanimous opinion of the manufacturers represented, that the increased car weights would be a hardship to the consumer in the end, and it was pointed out by one gentleman that this might react against the railway companies in an uneasiness among their employees in view of the unavoidable increase in the cost of living. It was pointed out that the trade was just beginning to get on its feet once more and that, as yet, buying for both the retail and wholesale trade was for only immediate requirements on account of money conditions. Consequently even at the present classification it is hard enough to take advantage of the car lot rates.

H. A. Laing, representing Libby's Chicago office, objected to an advance in the minimum weights on shipments of canned goods at the present time on the ground that trade conditions did not warrant the change and that it would only be another handicap. He proposed that the matter be left over until there was an improvement in trade that would permit the manufacturers to take advantage of car load rates.

After considerable discussion and varied versions of the effect of such a change, T. Marshall, who represents the Toronto Board of Trade on the railway committee, suggested that in view of the fact that the wholesalers were most vitally concerned in the change, the matter be left over until they (The Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association) had an opportunity of laying their side of their evidence before the committee. Mr. Marshall pointed out that the best interests of the manufacturers of canned goods would be upheld by the wholesale grocers who were vitally concerned in any reclassification that was made. This proposal met with the approval of the representatives of the manufacturers and packers and the matter was allowed to rest there.

Zeph. Hebert Speaks

The Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association was represented by St. Clair Balfour, of Balfour, Smye and Co., Hamilton and Zepherin Hebert, managing director of Hudon Hebert Co. Ltd., Montreal. At one point of the discussion Mr. Hebert rose to emphasize the present conditions under which the grocery trade is working, which as Mr. Hebert said, is not as well known to the manufacturers and the railway people as it should be. He pointed out that buying was of necessity limited to immediate requirements. For that reason wholesalers cannot afford to buy as heavily as they might under normal conditions. A change in classification, as proposed, he said, would virtually mean an advance in the cost of many food products which would react as a stumbling block to a return of prosperity.

It was arranged that a deputation from the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association representing all parts of Canada would meet and discuss the proposed reclassification on all the grocery lines with the special committee. No definite date for this gathering has yet been set.

Firms represented at last week's conference were, J. P. Coyle, Aylmer, Ont., D. F. Norton, Chicago, Ill., Geo. H. Robertson, Toronto. Ont., N. and E. S. DesPass, Chicago, representing the Carnation Milk Co., J. L. Toole and W. H. Dunn representing the Borden Milk Co., Montreal, J. C. Hodgson, Winona, representing the E. D. Smith & Son and the jam section of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. The Canadian Canners Ltd. was represented by T. E. Sheridan of Toronto, Wm. H. Lytle of T. A. Lytle Co.; D. B. McRae of Wilson, Lytle and Badgerow, Toronto; W. R. Caldwell of Dominion Canners Ltd., Hamilton, A. McNaughton, Chatham, and H. A. Laing of Chicago, representing Libby McNeil & Libby, St. Clair Balfour, of Balfour, Smye Co., Hamilton; A. H. Thorpe, Toronto, representing Wm. Davies; H. H. Ayer, representing Harris Abattoir Co. Ltd., W. R. Ingram of Swift Canadian Co. Ltd., Toronto.

Canned Haddies Have Widened the Fish Market for Retail Grocers

The Supply of Haddock Exceeds the Demand and Canning Makes Economical Distribution Possible —Years of Experimenting in Perfecting Process —Retailers Feature it in Summer

HADDOCK has in the past, because of the heavy catches at all seasons, been one of the varieties of fish that has taxed the ingenuity of man to distribute economically. In the east, haddock is marketed in its fresh state principally. The east, however, does not afford a big enough market, and even with cured haddock, known as haddies, offering a still wider opportunity, there is a surplus. The big production necessitates some other outlet and fish packers have succeeded in packing a large quantity of the haddie in a form ready for use. This has opened an unlimited territory for haddies and given the grocers of Canada another bid for a share in the fish trade.

Five Years of Experiment.

The manager of a large packing company told a Canadian Grocer representative that years of experiment were required before the product was prepared to the satisfaction of the packers. In speaking of the results he said: "Although the smaller haddock are by far the better flavored, it is hard to market them, either in the fresh or cured state, on account of the waste. By packing them at the coast we can use these smaller fish and at the same time get good flavored haddies. We have also made a study of packing the flavor as well as the fish, and I think that I am safe in saying that the flavor and the freshness can be sealed into the can as well as the food. The fish can be prepared and put into the tins in less time than it takes to ship the fresh catch to an inland market. Canned fish, for that reason, is not old."

Better Containers

Along with the experimenting in packing have come improvements in the containers on account of the demand that one must keep pace with the other. The best fish put up in poor containers, will not keep. This packer claims that the latest tins are flanged and locked, besides being sealed to make them air-tight. They are thoroughly inspected before they are ready for the market. One packer told Canadian Grocer that so few were the complaints of damaged tins that when one was submitted the claim was paid and the matter forgotten without any concern to the packers since so few are the faults that they have absolute confidence in the process of packing.

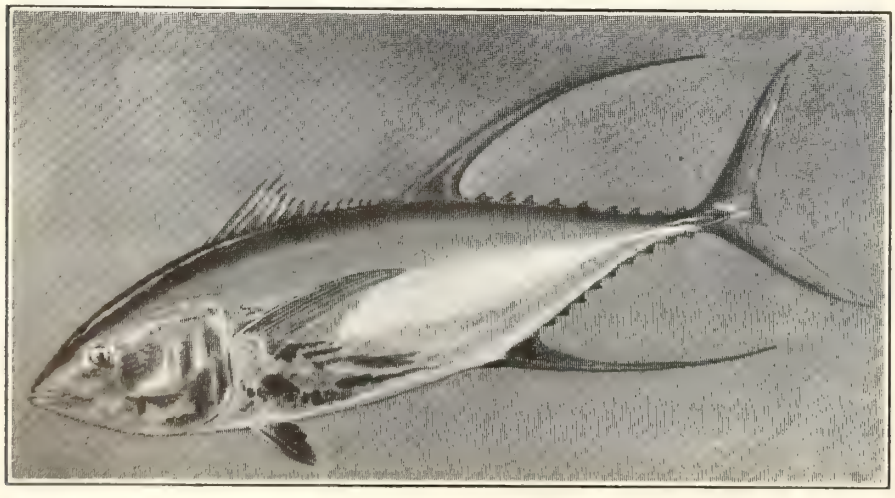
Tuna Fish is Found Along the Pacific and Atlantic Coasts

The Tunny fish or better known to the trade as "Tuna" is a very large fish found along the Pacific and Atlantic coasts, more particularly in the vicinity of California and Florida. It often attains a length of from twelve to fifteen feet and some have been found to weigh one thousand pounds and upwards.

It is generally caught in nets arranged in funnel-form, the fish entering the wide mouth and being gradually driven to the narrow end, to be there killed by lances and harpoons. The color of the Tuna is a pearly black or dark blue above, with silvery sides and white or silver spotted on the under side.

The flesh is considered a delicacy and is eaten both fresh and preserved in cans. The canned variety being the better known to the Canadian retail trade.

The finer white part of the flesh compares with chicken both in appearance and flavor and has often been referred to as the "fish with the chicken flavor."



The Tuna fish often referred to as the "fish with the chicken flavor."

The Kippered Herring

The word kippered is an old English word which means to cure by splitting, salting and smoking. It was originally applied to salmon but as the preference of the public for fresh salmon dictated a new form of marketing, the name died out in that connection and is now known in connection with herring.

Like the salmon the herring shoals travel about the ocean after food. Their travels depend largely upon weather conditions and the movement of the Gulf Stream. Sometimes, at seasons known to the fishermen, they come in shore and upon this habit depend herring fisheries. They are caught in traps off shore. Nets are stretched out from a projecting point of land and as the fish swim up the shore they are caught. This method is haphazard, according to the comment made by one interested in the industry, and the fishermen depend largely upon luck and often, as the fish come in to spawn, the catch is not as good or of such fine variety as if the fishermen went out to sea for their prize.

To fish for herring at sea, expensive equipment is required. Steamers, in the first place are needed so that the moving shoals may be followed. Then seines, or drag nets, which cost from three to five thousand dollars, are necessary and often nets are lost or damaged.

J. J. McCann, for 22 years in the grocery business in Brantford, Ont., was recently elected by acclamation to the Brantford city council, filling a vacancy caused by the resignation of a former alderman.

How the Name "Sardine" is Derived

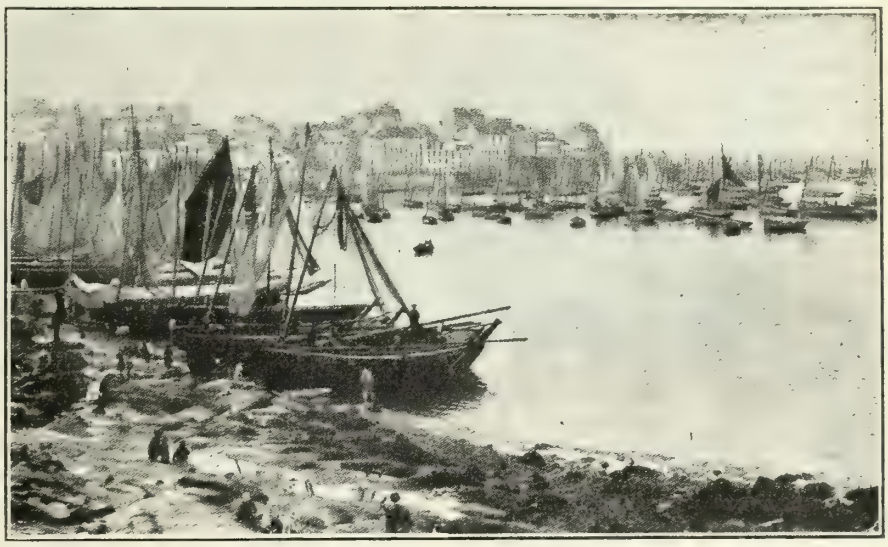
In the Early Days of the Sardine Industry, These Little Fish Were Taken From the Waters Around the Mediterranean Island of Sardinia, Hence the Name—Fishing Season Varies in Different Sections

IN the waters of the Mediterranean, in the Atlantic around the coasts of Spain, Portugal, France, North America and in the waters of the North Sea are found myriads of little fish which being prepared and canned are known in all parts of the world as "Sardines." In the early days of the industry, these little fish, the young of the pilchard, were taken principally from the waters around the Mediterranean island of Sardinia, from which the name Sardine is derived. This name is applied to all sardines no matter whether they are the young of the pilchard, herring or sprat. The latter are canned extensively in Canada and are known to the trade as domestic sardines.

The fishing season varies in different sections. In the Mediterranean, it extends over the entire year. On the shores of Brittany, the center of the French industry, it is confined chiefly to September and October.

Scatter Bait on the Water

Along the shores of Norway is found a fish similar to the pilchard but known scientifically as Clupea sprattus. These are the sardines known as Norwegian Bristling and are caught during the summer season. To attract the little fish to the vicinity of the nets, large quantities of bait are scattered on the water—that chiefly used being the salted eggs of cod, haddock, etc., mixed with peanut meal or flour. As many as a hundred thousand have been taken in a single net.



A fleet of sturdy little sardine fishing boats

Great care is taken in gathering in the fish so as not to injure them and it is the fisherman's aim to land the catch as speedily as possible to ensure their absolute freshness and consequently they are often at the canneries within one or two hours after capture.

Sorted Into Large Tubs.

As soon as the fish reach the factory, their heads and viscera are removed and the dressed bodies are sorted by size into large tubs of strong brine, where they remain for about an hour. They are next placed in small wicker baskets and washed in fresh water for a few seconds to remove loose scales and dirt.

Drying Sardines.—After the fish are cleaned, washed and salted, they are then placed on racks and dried for about one hour.

Then comes the drying—sometimes in the open and at other times, when the weather is not favorable, under cover.

For open-air drying, the fish are arranged by hand, one by one, in wire baskets or trays, each holding about one hundred and fifty. These trays have V-shaped divisions in which the fish are placed in regular rows with their tails upward, so as to allow the water to drain from the abdominal cavity. They remain there for a variable length of time, depending on their size, atmospheric conditions, etc., but the usual time for drying under favorable conditions is about one hour. In damp, foggy or rainy weather, they are dried indoors by artificial heat, less time being then required.

Are Immersed In Oil

After drying, they are taken in the same wire baskets to the cooking room and immersed in boiling oil, in open vats of various size and construction. As much of the oil is taken up in cooking, the vats require frequent replenishing. The oil immersion usually lasts about two minutes but varies according to the size of the fish.

The baskets are next removed to a table or platform with an inclined metal top, where the surplus oil is allowed to drain off, and are then taken to the packing room and packed in the familiar tins. After the cans are sealed they are immersed in boiling water for several hours for the purpose of completing the cooking, softening the bones and in addition for the purpose of sterilization. The kind and quality of oil used depends upon the grade of the packing.

Story of Pacific Salmon Makes Romantic Tale

Lives All But the Beginning and Ending of its Existence in the Depths of the Ocean—Journey of the Salmon From the Sea to the Spawning Grounds Provides a Story Real and Fascinating

THE LIFE story of the Pacific salmon is of dramatic interest, containing all the elements of romance—from its first fight for existence against almost overwhelming odds, to its magnificent struggle to perpetuate its race at the expense of its own existence.

The fish is an anadrom, living all but the beginning and end of its existence in the depths of the ocean. During his sojourn in the salt waters of the sea, it must be presumed he enjoys life, even though in a somewhat strenuous fashion. He is often found mutilated, probably from combats with his kind and other denizens of the deep, but he evidently finds feeding good and life generally worth while, for by the time he is four years old he has developed into a magnificent fish weighing from thirty to even a hundred pounds, and as handsome a creature as the water ever produced. The tragedy of his life comes when nature calls him to the spawning grounds for that journey is one of the world's most remarkable examples of the instinct of procreation.

Return Journey in Springtide

Every springtide the mature salmon—both male and female—begin in great "schools" the return journey. The date and distance of the runs and the rate of progress are regulated by the condition of the spawn. The earliest occur in February and March. The fish then travel to the headwaters of the rivers, many hundreds of miles up. In the later runs, nearer spawning grounds are chosen. The run of some species continues until fall. No natural obstacle can stop the pilgrims—they leap obstructing boulders and charge the rapids with indomitable energy, renewing and redoubling their efforts if repulsed, until they have won their progress onward, or die in the struggle. They take no food after entering fresh water.

When they finally reach the spawning grounds—weak from fasting and fatigue and often wounded by the rocks and other obstacles encountered—they rest for two or three weeks. Then each female fish scoops a hole in the gravel in the shallow water and deposits her eggs there. The male fertilizes them, and then they are left to their fate—the fish have completed the duty to nature which they undertook when they left their ocean homes. By this time the fish have lost the strength and beauty which distinguished them when they started on their journey—their glistening scales have disappeared, their flesh is flabby and dull, their skin disfigured with blotches. They linger around for a while and then they die—the last stage of the life of the great salmon is closed.

What of the spawn provided for at such sacrifice? The "fry"—tiny little creatures of queer aspect—emerge from the eggs in from 100 to 200 days after fertilization, the period depending largely upon the temperature of the water. Then in great quantities they fall prey to other fish and many birds. The female salmon contains about 3,500 eggs; otherwise the species would long ago have been extinct, so fierce is the onslaught. The "fry" which survive develop into little salmon which travel down the river again into the ocean—a long journey, slowly made, with many stops and again with heavy toll to other enemies along the route—thence to the ocean, there to live and fight and grow until in their turn, as they reach maturity, they make the final up-river journey.

Nature had provided for all these enemies by the great fecundity of the female salmon, but when to them was added the catching by human beings year by year, of tens of thousands of mature salmon before they had spawned, she was unable to cope with the situation, and a few years ago it seemed certain that before long the salmon would become as nearly extinct as the buffalo. That danger has, fortunately, been removed by restrictions on the catch and artificial hatchings of great quantities of the eggs to guard against their destruction by predatory fishes and birds. Another important and very interesting government work has been the construction of "Fish Ladders" to assist the fish in climbing the falls or dams which obstruct their up-river journey. A fish ladder is a series of very broad steps built up the side of a fall or dam. The salmon travel up them at their ease, as the height of each step is only a few inches, and the protection of the step ahead slacks the rapidity of the current and gives them many rests in the ascent. Before these ladders were constructed, the fish were compelled to climb the falls at one dash, and thousands upon thousands of them were thrown back killed or maimed.

Canada Shows More Activity In Sugar Trade

A report issued by the Dominion of Canada Bureau of Statistics covering the four-week period ended February 25, shows a great decrease over the stock of raw sugar of last year, being only about 6 per cent. of the amount on hand the same time last year. Receipts on the other hand, show a substantial increase, being more than doubled, 76,547,445 pounds having been received as compared with 30,759,712 coming in the same four-week period in 1921.

Meltings and reshipments of raw sugar also show a large increase over the figures for the same period a year ago, 84,521,054 pounds for this year comparing with 46,505,904 pounds for the same four weeks in 1921.

Stocks on hand of refined sugar also show a decided decrease in comparison with this time last year, 42,641,865 pounds showing on February 25 of this year with 68,595,586 pounds as the amount on hand on the same date last year.

Manufacture of granulated sugar almost doubled in the four-month period of this year as compared with last year, 67,346,041 pounds for this year comparing with 34,660,422 pounds for the same period in 1921. In the manufacture of yellow and brown sugar there was little change over last year's figures.

Total shipments of refined sugar also show a good increase over the figures of last year, 67,578,938 pounds having been shipped in the four-week period of this year under review with 55,523,000 pounds being the figures for the corresponding period of last year.

For the year to date, that is January 1 to February 25, there have been shipped 129,378,712 pounds of refined sugar as compared with 104,320,443 pounds for the same period the year previous.

Various Grades of Salmon and Average Weight of Fish in Each Species

Sockeye, Red Spring, Cohoes, Pinks, and Chums Constitute the Several Kinds—Salmon Was First Packed in 1864

PRACTICALLY all the world's supply of salmon is produced and packed on the Pacific Coast of Canada and the United States.

Salmon was first packed in the year 1864 on the Sacramento River, California, and was followed up on the Columbia River, Oregon, in 1866, on the Fraser River, British Columbia, in 1876, Puget Sound, Washington, in 1877 and in Alaska in 1878.

7,639,592 Cases in 1915

The total British Columbia pack for 1913 amounted to 1,353,901 cases, while the total pack on the Pacific Coast in 1915 amounted to 7,639,592 cases, valued at nearly $40,000,000. The season of 1921 closed with the smallest pack since one-third of the pack of 1918, totalling 1908, which was a little better than 603,548 cases, including all varieties. All species of Pacific Coast salmon are packed, and differ from one another principally in the color and relative firmness of the flesh and the proportion of fats.

Grades of Salmon

The following grades of salmon are packed in British Columbia:

Sockeye: The flesh is a deep red, and it is rich in oil. These fish average from six to eight pounds in weight, and they are caught from about the first of July to the end of August and are generally ready for shipment during the latter part of August and September.

Red Spring: A lighter colored fish than Sockeye, and not quite so firmly knitted in the flesh on account of the larger size. They vary in weight from 12 to 90 pounds, and are caught during the months of June, July and August.

Cohoes: These fish show lighter color and less oil than Red Spring. They vary in weight from six to fifteen pounds each and are caught later in the season than the Sockeye and Red Spring.

Pinks: These are small fish, averaging four to six pounds each. They are well flavored, but show only a light pink color and not much oil. Pinks are also a late fish and usually shipments are not ready before September.

Chums: These are the lowest-priced grade of salmon and are caught during the autumn months. They are practically colorless and show no oil.

In the canning of salmon, machinery is used largely. The fish is taken fresh from the salt water and immediately conveyed to the centre of the canneries by conveyers, and there passed into a machine known as the "Iron Chink," This device is fitted with an arrangement of knives, which cut off the head, tail and fins and remove the entrails, at the rate of about forty fish per minute. Each fish then receives careful washing in fresh running water and is passed on to a large revolving cutter or "gang knives," which divide the cleaned fish into sizes suitable for the cans.

Process of Packing

These pieces are then conveyed to the filling tables, and are carefully packed into the various-shaped tins. The filled cans are then fed into the wiping machine, where, by means of steam jets and brushes the cans are cleaned of any particle of fish which may remain on the outside of the can.

From the wiper the cans move on to the weighing machine, which turns aside with accuracy all light cans, allowing those of a standard weight to proceed to the "clincher," which lightly fits on the tops of the cans, without interrupting their journey to the "exhaust," a long steam box heated to a temperature of 212 degrees. The cans travel through these boxes for twenty minutes, during which time the fish is partially cooked and the outside air expelled.

The cans then pass along to the closing machine, which securely seams down the tops of the cans, making them airtight. These hermetically-sealed tins are then conveyed to the retorts, where the salmon receives its second cooking at a temperature of 240 degrees. Following this the cans are thoroughly washed, lacquered, labelled and boxed.

IMPORTS OF BELGIAN FOODSTUFFS SHOW GAIN

A. S. Bleakney reports from Brussels that Belgian imports for the nine months ending September of 1921 show a decrease in value of nearly two billion (2,000,000,000) francs on the figures for the corresponding period in 1920. This represents a fall of 19 per cent., which, considering the industrial crisis from which this country, in company with others, is emerging, cannot be considered excessive. The shrinkage in value, largely effected by importations from Germany, is reflected in the weight of imports, which increased by almost 4,000,000 francs, while food products, in which Canada is principally interested, showed a slight increase. Prices of food on the whole are firm, many showing an upward tendency.

Knowledge is Power

THE PRESERVING of fresh sea foods in hermetically sealed cans had its beginning over one hundred years ago, and the discovery that foods so treated and sterilized by exposure to a high degree of heat would keep wholesome for several years is credited to a French scientist.

Since then, and particularly during the last quarter of a century, the process has been greatly improved, and the canning industry has been making rapid strides. At the present time there is about twenty million dollars invested in fish canning plants. Each year new factories are being built to supply the ever increasing demand for canned fish and new varieties of fish products are constantly being added to the list.

One of the advantages in canned fish is that the customer can procure almost any kind of sea food throughout the entire year. As canned fish is wholly or partially prepared for the table and will keep in perfect condition for many months, the value cannot be estimated. From the retailer's point of view, canned fish can easily be classed as one of the "steady sellers" and the more it is featured the greater will be the reward in the way of increased sales and incidentally a larger profit. One of the best methods to get this increase in sales is to know something about the habits, methods of catching and canning the various sea food products and the more the merchants know about them the more he can talk intelligently about them to the customers.

With this object in view we are publishing in this issue, several intensely interesting stories on several of the more popular lines of fish sold in cans. The merchant is therefore well advised to peruse these articles carefully.

The Proper Window for Easter

THE QUESTION as to whether the best results can be obtained from displaying a single item or an assortment of articles of like character in the window is one which can only be determined by local conditions. A word of caution might be dropped against a bewildering assortment in window displays. Do not overlook the real purpose of window displays, namely, to focus the attention of the passerby on some article which you have for sale and having caught his attention and brought him into your store, see that the article displayed in the window is also prominently displayed inside. During the Easter season particularly, when the warm spring weather brings out the crowds, every effort should be put forth to make the windows pay hundred per cent. dividends.

Don't Kill Confidence

ONE ADVANTAGE in having the confidence of your customer is her willingness to change from one brand to another, because of your recommendation. Yet there are some clerks and merchants too, who kill this confidence by talking goods that don't come up to their representation. There may be several reasons for doing this. Perhaps the stock is too heavy, or may be someone has loaded you with a line that did not turn out to be as good a quality as you expected. We know of one merchant who makes it a practice of taking home a sample of practically every line he carries, and if he finds that article "up to the mark in quality" he makes a point of telling his customers about it. But on the other hand if the article is not all as represented he does not buy, or having bought, he tells his customers the plain facts about the line.

Whether this merchant's plan can be worked out in every case will have to be decided upon by each individual merchant. But in any case, don't disappoint your customer in your eagerness to make a sale. It doesn't pay.

Concentration Will Sell

RECENTLY a manufacturer sent a clipping from Canadian Grocer to each and every person on his sales staff. This clipping told the story of a merchant who had made a special drive on a certain article by displaying it in the windows and advertising in the local papers. The merchant, however, did not let the matter rest on the one article, but choosing another one, which was used in the preparation for the table, he concentrated selling efforts on the article that was not advertised. The result was that the merchant not only disposed of a large quantity of the article advertised but also passed over the counter another article with practically every sale.

The manufacturer enclosed with the clipping, a letter to the salespeople pointing out that "in order to swell your volume of sales, it is only necessary to concentrate."

Small Lobsters Best for Canning

Lobsters Weighing From Fifteen to Twenty Pounds Are Not Uncommon—Many Difficulties Are Encountered in Safeguarding Natural Propagation—Some Interesting Facts About Lobster

THE LOBSTER is a fish of the crab species which is rated by many people as the most delicate and delicious of all sea foods. Its meat is canned in immense quantities, the smallest of the catch retained being generally used for the purpose.

Lobsters weighing from fifteen to twenty pounds are not uncommon. It is the weight for size that indicates the quality—a large, light specimen is never as good as one smaller but heavier in proportion. A nine-inch lobster generally weighs about one pound. The enormous consumption and the difficulties experienced in safeguarding natural propagation have resulted in a steady diminution of the supply, but energetic measures are being taken by the government to offset the conditions, and in the "sea nurseries" artificial propagation has already proved so successful that it is reasonable to hope for a long and large supply for the future. One of the most difficult problems is to prevent the baby lobsters from destroying each other, their cannibalistic tendencies making doubly arduous the care required to raise them.

The Lobster of the Atlantic

The lobster of the Atlantic Coast is distinguished from others of the family by its immense claws. The native "spiney lobster" of the Pacific Coast, and the Cuban and French lobsters, have no claws, but are characterized by their "horns," or remarkably well-developed antennae. On the Atlantic Coast, lobster fishing is conducted all the way from Labrador to Delaware, but the coasts of Maine and Nova Scotia are the most fruitful sections. Nova Scotia is also noted for its large canneries.

Lobsters hug the shores of rocky coasts during the summer and are then more easily obtained than in the winter, when they go farther to sea. They are caught by means of "pots" or traps —box-like affairs, averaging four feet long and two high, made of laths or iron bars. The entrance, on the end, is funnel-shaped and of netting or wood, so formed as to make ingress easy, and egress practically impossible. The pot is bated with fish, weighted and sunk to the bottom of the lobsters' feeding-ground, generally about a half mile from shore, its location being marked by a buoy bearing the owner's name. The fisherman empties the pot through a door at the top, and throws back into the water the lobsters under the legal size—which is regulated by legislation.

Two Out of 10,000 Reach Maturity

It is estimated that but two lobsters out of every ten thousand reach maturity, but to counteract this alarmingly small percentage, a ten-inch lobster produces about ten thousand eggs at a time and doubles her product with every additional two inches of length. The young lobster casts his shell four times before the characteristics of the adult are assumed, and until the fifth change, which is reached at the age of from three to six weeks, it remains near the surface of the water and is destroyed by the million, both by storms and surface-feeding fish. After this period, its habitat is the bottom of the sea, where it feeds principally on fish, alive or dead indifferently. It grows only during, or immediately after, its annual moulting or casting of its shell, but at that time the rapidity of its development is wonderful.

Are Voracious in Habits

Lobsters are very voracious in their habits, and frequently have very animated combats among themselves, during which one of the combatants is reasonably sure to lose some part of a leg or claw—another member grows in its place, but it is always smaller than the original.

Shellfish, and especially lobsters, afford more phosphorus than any other food. They are, perhaps, unconsciously, on this account much eaten by the nerve-racked workers of the great cities.

The Source of Caviar

Caviar is the salted roe of various large fish of the sturgeon family. Nearly all the world's supply now comes from the Caspian Sea.

The finest quality Caviar is that from the Beluga, a Russian word meaning "Great White Sturgeon," the largest of all sturgeons, which grows to a length of twelve or fourteen feet and sometimes weighs considerably more than a ton—a single cowfish of that size giving as much as 360 pounds of caviar. These very big fish are becoming more scarce every year and the average Beluga now caught is much smaller.

After the fish has been killed the roe is separated from the skin and fine tissues which envelop it by gently rubbing through a sieve. For "fresh," i. e., mildly salted, caviar, only roe in the best possible condition is suitable. It is salted in the proportion of two to six pounds to each 100 pounds of roe, drained and put in air-tight tin packages or glass jars.

The size of the egg or grain varies from very small to that of peas. The color is generally black, but may be also any one of various shades of yellow, grey, dark green and brown. The real test of caviar is its flavor, and this is as often found in the small as in the large grain and in the black as in any other color, but the large eggs and the grey and yellow or "gold" colors are the most rare and therefore the most expensive. There is very little caviar produced in North America today, uncontrolled slaughter of the fish for many years having rendered it so scarce that it hardly pays to hunt it.

Caviar is generally eaten on bread or toast with oil, lemon juice or vinegar and various garnishes. It is also occasionally served on ice as a special course at luncheon and dinner parties.

Mr. F. M. Thompson has the largest general store in Blairmore, Alta. Mr. H. Pinkney, the grocery manager, understands every phase of the grocery business and gets the best results from his clerks by taking them into his confidence and passing on to them all the information he can possibly obtain about his different lines. He believes in the system of having a "get-together-meeting" every couple of weeks and discussing certain lines that move more slowly than they should, consequently has no dead stock on his shelves as his clerks have all become very efficient salesmen through such methods being adopted.

When he saw a comparison made between a good quality red spring salmon and KILTIE Pink salmon for flavor, and found the KILTIE Pink to be the nicer, and realized the price was considerably less, he immediately added it to his specials, and has now worked up a nice trade on KILTIE Brand Pink salmon.

Saskatchewan

Granger's store in Creelman, Sask., has recently been renovated and rearranged. Mr. N. Wiseman, the new manager, embodied some new ideas in his work and now has a very up-to-date general store. He has adopted the straight cash business, which is becoming more popular every day. It enables him to sell for less than the old method, his customers are better satisfied and are finding it the most economical way to make their purchases. He had a neat display of KILTIE salmon on one of his grocery counters and has found it to be one of his most profitable lines. He does not hesitate to recommend it to his most discriminating customers, as he has sold considerable of it and found his customers well pleased with the quality and flavor.

British Columbia

Messrs. Shields & Co., of Lumby, B.C., have an attractive department store in the Okanagan Valley. Their customers have always been served with the best it was possible to get and Mr. Shields immediately added KILTIE Pink salmon to his quality lines as soon as he saw it opened and found the color and flavor the best he had ever tasted or seen. He has a way of making neat displays of his different lines, which makes all available spaces efficient silent salesmen.

Compares Slow With Rapid Turnover

Ways to Regulate Retail Credit Giving—Merchant Carrying a General Line of Merchandise Seeks Information as to Whether Slower Moving Lines With a Gross Margin of 35 Per Cent. or Faster Lines at 18 Per Cent. Are the Better

By HENRY JOHNSON, Jr.

THIS MAN writes of basic things in an intelligent way:

Quebec, February 16, 1922.

Henry Johnson, Jr., Canadian Grocer:

Dear Sir,—I read your stories with interest and profit, and I want to ask you a question. I have a general store. My expenses are around 14 per cent. There are certain lines in my dry goods stock that do not turn more than twice a year. There is a certain package tea that turns nine times a year with a gross margin of 18 per cent. In trying to figure my net profit on different lines, I often wonder if the slow-turning lines of dry goods carrying gross margins of 35 per cent, do me any more good than a fast-moving line like the tea I mention, which turns nine times at 18 per cent.

Yours truly,

That letter indicates how many merchants are taking apart their figures to study them in detail, and segregate the things that pay real money in correct proportion to the cost of handling, risk and all other factors; and that I feel is the most vital study of all.

Assuming that no element enters into this problem save that of capital investment and the earnings to be derived therefrom, the dry goods items show up best. For, if you assume four per cent. net on each turn of the tea and make the turn nine times, you will have 36 per cent net earnings on sales. Divide that by 82, the figure that will stand for cost ratio to the dollar of sales, and you will have earnings of 44 per cent on capital employed.

Against that, assume that there is 17 per cent net made on each turn of the dry goods items, you have two turns and show 34 per cent. earned on sales. Divide that by 65, which is the figure that will stand for capital in this case, and you will find annual earnings of 52.3 per cent. plus on capital used.

Cost of Handling Not the Same On All Lines

But with an average of 14 per cent. expense on sales, it is certain that the tea costs less and the drygoods items more than the average to handle. Not knowing what the dry goods items are, I cannot judge definitely, but I should assume that probably a fair division of general expense would assign not more than 10 per cent to the tea and fully 20 per cent. to the others. Then the figures would show 8 per cent. net on tea and 15 per cent net on the others for each turn. We should then have 72 per cent on the tea sales, which, figured back on the same basis to capital, would show capital earnings of 87.8 per cent. plus. We should then have 30 per cent. on sales of the drygoods items, which would show 46.1 per cent. plus on capital.

All of this takes no account of the probably higher capital investment in the dry goods, nor their possible style value, or seasonal limitations and the consequent additional risks involved, against the tea, which is practically a staple. But this does not mean that the dry goods items are not legitimate, profitable and probably necessary to the business. A merchant must keep up a suitable assortment to meet the demands of his trade. Failing that, he soon will have no business. But this does mean that a man must be ever watchful to carry the minimum slow-turning stocks possible to meet his trade's needs, putting pressure on lines that move rapidly and which carry the least risk.

To carry light stocks is good business always. Better let your money out at interest than carry it locked up in idle stocks.

How to Handle Credits

A merchant who does a large proportion of his business on credit seeks ways to make his customers pay up more promptly. He has tried attaching 2 per cent. where goods are charged and rebating this if the bill is paid in or within 30 days; but this induced cash buyers to take full 30 days, since there was no advantage in paying cash while credit customers "got mad." He questions about the plan of marking goods high enough to cover all average credit charges, and losses, and then giving a discount for cash. He thinks this might make his prices so high as to put him out of competition.

What he wants is so to arrange his business that the credit customer will be made to pay directly for the bookkeeping, risk, interest and collection of accounts and which also will discourage the trade of those who habitually let their bills run to the overdue point.

My experience leads me to these conclusions: that the credit business must be regulated and limited by certain fixed rules which are operated, as all rules must be, with negligible exceptions, carefully considered and closely limited.

The first rule must be the time-limit during which accounts will be run. Usually this is 30 days, but in certain localities it is longer. It may be necessary to finance the living of farmers between crops, yet this is not nearly so necessary as some think. I know a very successful general merchant who holds that the banks must finance farmers—and his belief is justified, for that is precisely what he has succeeded in effecting in his town. Reason it out: If the farmer is good he can get money from those whose business is to deal in money. Then the farmer pays the cost of that money, and the merchant has nothing to do with that phase of the question. If the farmer is not good, you don't want him.

Laws of the Medes and Persians

Now, there are no laws like unto those of the Medes and Persians, "which altereth not," but you will not be successful if you do not make yourself feel that your rules are just of that kind and that you must obey them. Let that sink in: You cannot make exceptions without jeopardizing your success. So 30 days, or any other period decided on, must be regarded as the deadline—and you must not overstep it.

Second rule.—Just as strongly insisted on—no balances are to be carried for anyone in any circumstances.

Third rule.—Take a loss now rather than later, stop the leak while it is small.

Success in this presupposes that you act on the idea that prevention is better than cure. Find out all about the customer from himself first. Be frank about this. You are entitled to know all about anybody to whom you are asked to loan money, which is what extending credit amounts to. State your terms clearly, ascertain how much the account is apt to run to in the 30 days and note that amount somewhere on your record of that account. Verify, or correct, your information before you let any goods leave your store charged to the customer. If everything is not satisfactory, do not open the account at all.

Is This Man Just a Storekeeper or Is He a Merchant?

By a Vancouver Correspondent.

One of the salesmen for a salmon packer called upon a prairie retailer lately and asked him how his pink salmon was selling.

"Oh, it's not selling very fast," said the storekeeper. Just at this point the editor feels inclined to scratch out "storekeeper" and put in "merchant," but wait and see. "No," added the storekeeper, "I find that cohoe sells better than pink salmon. My customers usually take cohoe at the same price."

"The same price," said the traveller, "You don't mean to tell me that you have them marked at the same price?"

"Sure they are, both at 40 cents per tin," said the retailer.

"But," said the traveller, "your pink salmon is costing you less than fifteen cents per tin. Don't you think you are exacting a rather steep profit from one can of pink salmon? It certainly is not a fair price to the consumer, and it is not fair to the packer who is putting up a splendid article of food that could be sold to the consumer at 20 cents, giving her good value, and you a fair profit."

He pleaded in vain that the turnover would be faster and the total profit greater if the price were reasonable. The retailer was obdurate. He said his customers had been accustomed to paying that much for a can of salmon and he was not going to make any change.

The salesman pointed out that there should be a difference between red cohoe salmon and pinks, at least a difference of 10 cents per can.

So the retailer conceded his point.... and raised his cohoe price to 50 cents.

Now—Is he a STOREKEEPER or a MERCHANT?

Makes Displays of Canned Fish That Mean Bigger Sales

Montreal:—To the grocer, the variety of canned fish on the market offers a splendid opportunity for seizing a part of the weekly demand for fish.

The manner of display has no limit, neither does it require a separate department. It carries with it practically no risk. What it does require is a little forethought, salesmanship, and the energy to make displays of the line at the right time.

One Grocer's Experience.

Alex. Davidson, proprietor of a grocery store at 4907 Sherbrooke St., west, Westmount, in the heart of the residental section of Montreal, does a good trade in fish on Thursday and Friday of every week in virtue of the special displays of canned fish that he makes in his windows and on his counters at that time. In speaking to Canadian Grocer representative about the opportunity he said, "By talking the merits of canned fish of all descriptions and by making displays of it at the psychological time I have built up a good trade in this particular line. Not only that, but I have so impressed it on the minds of my customers that now without any special display I notice an increased demand for canned fish when fish day comes around. Canned fish is good and the trouble is that the public do not know it. Some years ago people had trouble with canned goods which seemed to reflect particularly on canned fish and they have not been taught since that there has been a vast improvement in the packing of all canned goods. If a grocer will take the trouble to do this he can command a good part of the fish trade.

HELPED THE INVENTORY

Georgetown, P. E. I.

Editor, Canadian Grocer,

Dear Sirs:—

The list of proprietary articles published in February 10th is a good idea. We made use of it and find it great help in assisting us to mark our inventory correctly.

Will be good thing if you will publish it once every three months.

Business Ethics

By Rotarian R. S. CORYELL, a retail dealer, in Rotary Voice

THE greatest business enterprise in Canada—that of supplying the needs of the Canadian public—remains unorganized in many important phases except for a few small groups. This broad statement may be challenged, but the fact remains that few sections of retail business have advanced to the point of organizing in order that they might render the most useful service to the communities in which they do business.

In view of this condition, it is difficult to do more than suggest in a broad way some of the elementary and basic laws upon which a Code of Correct Practice for retailers might be founded.

It is true that in Canada there are many splendid and conspicuous examples of individual retail store enterprises which are serving the public honorably and fairly, and whose staffs are trained to exercise the Golden Rule in their contact with their employers and the store's customers. If the Business Methods Committee of the Rotary Club are successful in so emphasizing the need for a Code of Correct Practice for retail merchants to which all can subscribe, as to stimulate them to action, they will have rendered a great and lasting service to the merchants and the buying public of Canada.

Broadly speaking, such a code would fall naturally into three divisions:

1. The responsibility of a retail store to customers.

2. The responsibility of a retail store to its employees.

3. The responsibility of the employees of a retail store to their employer.

No code is worth the effort to write it, however, that has not as its cornerstone The Golden Rule. All the high-sounding declarations of a merchant such as "Satisfaction or your money back," "Satisfaction guaranteed, and you to be the judge," and so on, will avail him nothing in the long run if he has not within him the desire to operate on the principle of the Golden Rule and the ability to transmit this desire to his employees. Similarly, in his relations with employees, the same old Golden Rule is the lubricant that preserves harmony and challenges the loyal service of his staff to himself and his business.

Certain it is, however, that definite lines of conduct can and should be laid down for the guidance of the various trade sections of retail business. Perhaps the writer will be pardoned if he falls into the easiest way of suggesting what these might be by quoting some of the plans that have been evolved in the process of "cleaning house" in the business with which he is connected.

Under the first heading of the three noted above are these:

(a) One fair price to all customers—no salesman is permitted to juggle prices.

(b) Truthful presentation of the facts about the goods. We believe the truth is always good enough.

(c) Our pledge to customers is "Satisfaction guaranteed here, and You be the judge"—in other words, when dissatisfaction exists, the customer is permitted to dictate the method of adjustment.

Under the second heading are these:

(a) Believing that every employee of this house realizes that his or her interests are identical with ours, he or she is assumed to be loyal members of the organization until we find otherwise.

(b) Realizing that a record of continuous and faithful service to the house should have its reward, we carry insurance on the life of every employee of six months or more service, payable to his or her dependents in the event of death.

(c) With a view to conserving the health and strength of our staff, we are exponents of short hours with Saturday half-holidays in the summer months.

Under the third heading are these:

(a) We expect our employees to reciprocate our faith in them by giving a full day's work for a full day's pay.

(b) We regard every employee, no matter what the title of his job may be, as a potential salesman and as a loyal member of the organization to do everything in his power to advance the interests and to conserve the reputation of this house.

(c) We expect every employee to so regard his connection with this business as to be fully sensible to his responsibility as a representative of the company, and to keep himself clean in appearance and speech and to conduct himself in such a manner as to reflect credit upon the institution.

Navigation Opens One Week Earlier Than Last Year

Montreal—The port of Montreal will be opened and the navigation of the St. Lawrence River will be recommenced by passenger and freight vessels on April 24th, one week earlier than last season.

The Cape Diamond and the Saguenay will leave this port on April 24th and April 25th respectively for Quebec and the intermediate points, Sorel and Three Rivers, laying down and picking up freight. Just as soon as the canal is ready the freighter Edmonton, bound from Montreal to Fort William and putting in at Toronto and Hamilton, will leave Montreal. Other freighters and grain carriers will have preceded her in the meantime from lake ports and will compose the first to bring down grain from the head of the lakes to local elevators.

A New Freight Service

A newly planned freight service is scheduled to run from Montreal weekly every Thursday and two big freight carriers will maintain the connection throughout navigation season. The Richelieu River is all clear, the ice push having come earlier this year than in previous years.

These facts are of special interest to the grocery trade in view of the fact that the boat freight service offers the towns on the St. Lawrence and on Lake Ontario a cheaper form of distribution. As far west as Cornwall and east to below Quebec is fed by Montreal firms and many retail grocers are awaiting the opening of navigation to replenish their supplies. Molasses, for one thing, is largely handled by the river freighters.

New Goods

"Certo" is a new product being placed on the market by the Douglas Packing Co., Cobourg, Ont. The scientific name is Pectin, which has been in use by jam and marmalade manufacturers for many years, but now it is being put up in bottles for home use. Pectin is one of the elements nature puts into fruits. It is what makes jelly "jell." It is found in all fruits but the quantity varies with different degrees of ripeness. "Certo" is the brand name of this Pectin the above company is putting up for household use. They have also issued a booklet showing how it is used for different fruits.

J. E. Adams of the Adams Grocery Ltd., Lindsay, accompanied by Mrs. Adams, has just returned from Florida, where they spent the greater part of the winter.

Letters to Editor

FOLLOWS THE MARKET CLOSELY

Editor, Canadian Grocer.

Your Proprietary Article issue of Feb. 10 is a help to the merchants of this country who are trying to get their prices based on the present prevailing market prices and as some lines are not selling in any large quantities, it makes it easy for the merchant to go through his grocery and mark his prices down accordingly.

Every merchant should at this time retail his goods at the actual value of same.

For the last year and a half I have been following the market as closely as possible and I might say that business was never so good as at the present time and I attribute this to selling my goods as low as possible. I do not mean cutting prices because I am getting the profit but I am following the markets and selling to the people their supplies at a fair price. Your paper "CANADIAN GROCER" is a great help to any retail merchant.

OPPOSES PROPOSED EGG MARKING MEASURE

Editor Canadian Grocer:—With reference to the contemplated "Marking of Eggs Act," we wish to protest strongly against the proposed measure, as being amongst other things quite impracticable as we see it. With one hundred and one formulae "changing hourly" and with the source of supply of eggs varying in like manner, it would be impossible to carry out the intention of such an act.

Aside from this, as we see it, there would be as much sense and justice in calling upon us to mark, say, all goods, American flour or other ingredients which are in general use at the Pacific Coast, the origin of which is liable to be one hour B. C. production, and U. S. or other origin the next hour.

BUTTER MAKER WANTED

Does any reader know of a butter maker who would be interested in opening and operating a creamery in a good locality?

Canadian Grocer has a letter of enquiry from a subscriber in Ontario in this connection. This merchant would like to correspond with a reliable man who is a good butter maker with a view to erecting a creamery. If you know of a man, please have him write us—153 University Ave., Toronto.

Are Package Teas Due for an Early Jump in Prices?

Montreal. — In view of the rapidly advancing prices on black teas, a jump may be expected in package teas in the near future. Some brands have been advancing in step with the bulk market but others have not changed in many months and in these a big advance may be expected. H. Cluse, the Montreal manager of Salada Tea Co., when asked for his opinion of future developments in package teas said, "primary markets have been advancing rapidly and I believe have not yet reached their peak. In the last year prices have gone up fifteen cents, but package teas have not kept pace. Our prices have not been changed in many months with the result that to buy to-day the cost would be higher than the present selling prices. It looks as if some change would come."

J. Anderson, manager of Chase and Sanborn Co., Montreal, speaking to Canadian Grocer said: "Our policy has been to bring up our prices a little at a time so as to avoid any big jumps. The present price I think will cover the market for the next two weeks, but if the primary markets keep on advancing as they have in the past few months, another advance will be necessitated by the end of this month. Personally I do not think that black teas have yet reached their peak."

Local wholesalers look for an advance in some package teas which have not had a change in many months. It is claimed that with the big advance in primary markets, local prices cannot help but keep pace. Some wholesalers guess the advance at ten or fifteen cents a pound.

Delivery Boys Fake Hold-up Order To Rob Employers

Montreal. — For the second time recently the public's attention has been drawn to a ruse on the part of a delivery boy in obtaining money from his employer under false pretences. In both cases it was a butcher who suffered. On a Saturday night recently a young boy, 15 years of age, employed by one of the local butchers was found gagged and bound in a lane on Ontario Street, East, near Amherst. The boy claimed that he had been attacked and robbed of $33.00, the money he had collected for his employer. When the boy was questioned however, he did not give satisfactory explanations and the police made enquiries. In the first place they found that the cord and the gag on the boy were by no means tight and that with very little trouble he could have shouted for help. The detective decided there was something wrong and searched the district for further information. Later he found a wallet in the possession of another boy which contained $15.50. The wallet was later identified as the property of the butcher who employed the first boy. The second boy admitted that he had got the wallet from his friend. Both boys were arrested and will appear in the Juvenile Court. A similar case happened some weeks ago when the delivery boy for another local butcher faked a hold-up and reported to his employer that he had been robbed of $50, which he had collected that night. This boy went so far as to allow a companion to hit him over the head with a bottle, causing a severe gash in his scalp, in order to substantiate his claim that he had been robbed. Under a cross examination by the detective department he admitted that the whole thing had been staged and that the money was to be found in his room in a local boarding house.

London Business Men Want Sales Tax Changed

London. — London wholesalers are joining hands with the retailers of the city in demanding that the Federal Government revise the existing sales tax. Representations have been made to Ottawa by the secretary of the retailers' association to have all groceries subjected to a uniform tax of three per cent. at the source of origin or of entry to the country.

"One tax on the manufacturer, producer or importer of goods would simplify business for the wholesale as well as the retail merchants," William Smith, of T. B. Escott & Co., stated: "it would of course eliminate a great deal of unnecessary bookkeeping for us and help the Government collect the revenue from the taxable commodities. We have placed the matter before the Government at Ottawa."

Hudson's Bay Co. Acquires Store In Saskatoon

Saskatoon, Sask. (Special).—The Hudson's Bay Company will take over the operation of the store of J. F. Cairns, Ltd., April 15. Ill health prompted Mr. Cairns to dispose of his business which he had built up from a small beginning in 1902.

The building, which is 100 by 140 feet, five stories and basement, is of steel and concrete with pressed brick frontage, and was occupied in 1913. Aside from its fireproof construction, the building is protected by a thorough sprinkler system. The fixtures on the main and second floors are finished in mahogany, as well as the spacious show windows; the grocery department and offices are in oak.

The acquisition of this store will bring the number of modern department stores operated by the Hudson's Bay Company up to 11; two in Saskatchewan, three in Alberta, five in British Columbia and one in Manitoba; in addition to wholesale branches in Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Regina, Edmonton, Calgary and Vancouver.

The business known at Edmonds, B. C., as Thompson & Wilson will be in future known as Wilson's Cash Grocery.

WEEKLY GROCERY MARKET REPORTS

Statements from Buying Centres.

MARKETS AT A GLANCE

SOME reductions in refined sugar prices have taken place in the Eastern and Western provinces and there appears to be a great deal of confusion in the situation in Montreal and Toronto. In the latter markets, wholesalers seem to have entered upon a price cutting war with the result that hardly two houses are quoting the same price. The average price, however, is around $6.50. Refiners have not changed their list price, but we understand that unofficially they are quoting $6.50 Montreal basis.

The raw sugar market during the week was somewhat irregular, prices being both up and down. Cubas bringing 2 7-16c c. & f. New York, for the first part of the week and later at 2 5-16c. American refiners, however, do not appear to want to pay more than 2¼c and some sales were made on that basis. There is a let up in the demand for the United Kingdom: home consumption being quiet at present owing to the possibility of a reduction in duty and buyers are not showing much interest over there at the moment.

Spot quotations on teas show some advances with the situation continuing strong reflecting the higher tendencies in primary markets.

Canned tomatoes and peas are moving freely with quotations firmly held. Lobsters and sliced pineapple are becoming cleaned up.

Evaporated apples are higher while prunes continue firm under an active demand. Raisins are rather quiet at the moment with currants strong in primary markets and unchanged on spot.

The nut situation shows little change on spot but statistically the situation is strong on account of the small stocks which makes it appear that a higher price can be expected later in the season. Rices, spices and syrups are in a firm position, but spot quotations are unchanged.

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, April 5.—The sugar market is the feature of the grocery line with an upset condition that has virtually meant a reduction in price. Local wholesalers are quoting $6.50 on granulated of all refineries but only Dominion Sugar Refineries quote this as the list basis. Allspice, cinnamon and ginger are advanced in price. There is no change in molasses or corn syrups. Tea is also a feature with an advancing market for all black teas. Coffee is strengthing up but spot prices are unchanged. Cutting is going on in rolled oats, buckwheat flour and barley but millers state that the market is firm with strength in rolled oats. Cocoanut in packages is reduced. Rice is steadily gaining strength and an advance in local wholesale prices may be expected in the near future. Canned goods are unchanged but canned vegetables are gaining strength and point toward higher prices. There is practically no change in dried fruits.

COFFEE MARKET STRONG

Montreal.

COFFEE—Coffee prices remain unchanged although the primary markets are strong with some slight advances. Local dealers do not expect an advance in price, as far as can be seen at present but the market is certainly in a firm position.

CUTTING IN CEREALS

Montreal.

CEREALS—The cereal market is strong as far as rolled oats, oatmeal and corn meal are concerned. Buckwheat flour however, is reduced to $4.25 per bag, split peas are reduced to $6.50 per bag and pearl barley is reduced to $4.50 per bag. The decline in buckwheat flour does not indicate the true condition of the market. In reality this flour is firm with the end of the season drawing near. The reduction quoted comes as a result of some local interests unloading an oversupply. Cutting too is going on in rolled oats but millers state that they are not anxious to sell at present prices which little more than cover costs.

STRONG TONE TO RICE

Montreal

RICE—A strong tone prevails in the rice market and mills have shown anxiety to buy the small remaining stocks in farmer's hands. Prices offered show an advance of from 25 to 30c per barrel for the rough rice and this would indicate a particularly strong market for clean. Clean rice market has shown more activity and stocks have been rapidly reduced in primary markets. It is estimated that by the end of April there will not be two million bags of rice left in the entire rice belt in the United States with five months still remaining before the new crop. In first hands all grades of clean rice have advanced ¼c to ⅜c, but no change has yet been made in local wholesale trade.

ALLSPICE ADVANCED

Montreal.

SPICES—The feature of the spice market is an advance of 2c per lb. on allspice, making the price 20c per lb. Ground cinnamon is advanced to 25c per lb. and Japan ginger is advanced to 28c per lb. These advances are as a result of previous strength in primary markets which have been noted during the past few weeks. Primary markets still remain strong in these lines with a shortage of supplies. Cocoanut in 20 lb. pails is down 2½c per lb. bringing the price to 22½c, while the sweetened in pound packages is reduced to 34c per lb.

MOLASSES PRICES FIRM

SUGAR REDUCED

Montreal

SUGAR—The sugar market is in an up-set condition with all the refineries selling below the list price. Each one admits that cutting is going on and Dominion sugar is quoting $6.50 locally. There is much expectancy in the market in connection with the situation and retailers are holding off awaiting developments. It is hard to say at just what price sugar is being sold since refiners refuse to make any definite statement in connection with the price. It would seem however, that the market was due for a break unless refiners, wholesalers and jobbers get together and return to the list price basis. Some indications of the price quoted to the retail trade can be gathered from the various prices quoted by the local grocers on granulated sugar. Prices as low as 6 cents per pound are to be noted in the city. One wholesale house quotes $6.50 on all brands of granulated sugar. The secretary of the Wholesale Grocers Association this week issued a circular after a meeting held on March 30th drawing attention of the trade to the equalized rates of Montreal which stipulate that no allowance should be made for cartage to purchasers when the buyer does his own carting.

BLACK TEAS ADVANCED

Montreal.

TEAS—One wholesale house has advanced all black teas 4c per lb. during the past week and still the local market is strong with every indication for further advances. Spot stocks are light and the demand abroad is keen. As a result of an over production in 1920, planters in India, Ceylon and Java agreed to reduce the 1921 crop 20 per cent. This resulted in an under production in view of the fact that consumption was increased by the lower prices. Now all surplus stocks in the world have been cleaned up and prices, in primary markets have reached a high point. Since last May prices in London, Calcutta and Colombo have advanced 15c and 16c per lb. Many packages teas have been taking the advances as they came but others have held the old price for a number of months so that under the present conditions a sharp advance is likely in a week or so.

LOCAL WALNUTS LOWER

Montreal.

NUTS—Despite the strong tone to the walnut market abroad, some local wholesalers are quoting a reduction of two cents on shelled Bordeaux walnuts, making the price 72c per lb. Shelled Valencia almonds are reduced to 44c per lb. Peanuts are a little easier with a reduction of from ½c to 1c on the different grades. Advice from France indicates strength in walnuts with prices advancing and the present cut in walnuts is likely to reverse as soon as spot stocks are cleaned up.

Montreal.

FRUIT.—Oranges are advanced 50c per case. The price now ranges from $8. to $9. per case according to size and brand. Grapefruit are firm and strawberries are unchanged. Messina lemons are easier with a reduction of 50c per case. Apples are strong in price and the supply of good apples is limited. Boxed apples are unchanged but a higher price would not be surprising in the next week or so.

MORE ONIONS ON MARKET

Montreal.

VEGETABLES.—Larger supplies of onions are on the market and prices are a little easier. Egyptian onions in 100 lb. bags are quoted at $9.50 and a supply of Australian and New Zealand onions are offered at the same price. Lettuce is in good supply with unchanged prices but celery is up 50c per crate. Green peppers are lower and radishes are offered at $1.25 per doz. bunches. Tomatoes are unchanged.

SOME SOAPS REDUCED

Montreal.

SOAPS.—N. K. Fairbanks have reduced the price on Gold Dust washing powder making the large size $6.75 per case, medium, $5.75 and small $5.75. Fairbanks Santa Claus laundry soap is reduced to $6.65 per case. Gem Lye is reduced to $5 per case, a drop of 50c.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, April 5.—Business in wholesale circles is rather quiet but there appears to be considerable price cutting, particularly on sugar, which at the moment is in a demoralized state. Wholesalers have reduced sugar prices considerably, hardly two houses quoting alike. Refiners, too, appear to be in the cutting as they still maintain the official list, unchanged, but we have reason to believe that an unofficial lower price basis is quoted. Canned vegetables continue strong with lobsters becoming scarce. Interest is still shown in canned sliced pineapple, while strawberries are showing signs of scarcity. Rolled oats look easier as some manufacturers are quoting a lower price to the wholesale trade. The activity in prunes continues, but package raisins are inclined to be a slow seller with the bulk of the raisins sales centred on Thompson's seedless in bulk. Evaporated apples are again advanced. Rices are firm. Local tea prices are again moved upward, reflecting the higher prices in primary markets. The potato market is slightly firmer owing to the difficulty in getting supplies on account of the bad roads.

STRONG BEAN MARKET

Toronto

BEANS.—The market continues to rule with a strong tone. No material improvement is noted in supplies nor do present indications point to any relief as it is firmly believed that the balance on Ontario beans in producers' hands is very limited. Quotations are unchanged but s rongly held.

LOBSTERS CLEANING UP

Toronto.

CANNED GOODS.—Vegetables are still in a strong position although there appears to be some low prices offered on certain independent packs. One brand of tomatoes, peas and corn are offered at $1.45 per doz. while another brand of corn is offered at $1.20 per doz. Tomatoes generally speaking are firmly held at around $1.70 per doz. In canned fruits, the situation is fairly steady but there continues to be a considerable interest in sliced pineapple, which as reported under this heading last week, is scarce. Strawberries are also beginning to show signs of scarcity. Lobsters are becoming closely cleaned up and some re-sales have been made around $4 per doz. for halves. Quotations to the retail trade on halves range from $4.15 to $4.25 per doz. and $2.75 to $3 for quarters.

UNCERTAINTY IN ROLLED OATS

Toronto

CEREALS.—The feature in the cereal market is the situation on rolled oats which appears to have an uncertain tone. Manufacturers claim that statistically the position on rolled oats calls for strong to higher prices but in face of this condition it appears that some manufacturers have cut prices considerably to the wholesale trade. Wholesalers' quotations, however, to the retail trade are unchanged at $3.15 to $3.25 pere 98 lb. bag, but there is some talk in certain quarters of a reduction.

ANOTHER ADVANCE IN TEAS

Toronto.

TEAS.—Local wholesalers and importers have registered another advance on practically al grades of teas. This is the second advance in a week making a total of from four to six cents per lb. There are no new developments of a startling nature to report from primary markets other than a gradual upward tendency with some of the grades becoming more difficult to procure.

LOW SUGAR PRICES

Toronto.

SUGAR.—There appears to be a complete demoralization in the local sugar situation. Wholesalers appear to have taken the attitude of who can sell the lowest. Refiners have not changed their official list but we have reason to believe that unofficially, refiners are quoting on the basis of $6.50 Montreal. It has been said also that certain wholesalers are buying at even a lower basis and the price generally quoted by wholesalers to the retail trade is $6.45.

SYRUPS SHOW LITTLE CHANGE

Toronto.

SYRUPS.—There is a brisk demand for new made maple syrup, supplies arriving during the week were light, prosumably on acount of the unfavorable weather. Quotations generally range around $2.25 per gal. Corn syrups are in fair demand at unchanged quotations while molasses holds firm.

PINEAPPLES ARRIVING

Toronto.

FRUIT.—Although pineapples have been on the market for practically throughout the latter part of the winter months, this week sees the best quality that has been on the market for some time. Prices, too, are a little easier at $7.75 for 18s: 24s and 30s at $9: and 36s at $8 per crate. POTATOES SHADE FIRMER

Toronto.

VEGETABLES.—The potato market is a shade firmer with prices on track for Ontario stock slightly higher at $1 per bag, car lots on track. This is attributed to the stormy weather of last week and the bad roads throughout the country. Quebecs are offered on track at $1.15 while quotations to the retail trade range from $1.15 to $1.30 per bag. New Brunswick Cobblers, for seed, are quoted to the trade at $1.75 per bag. The first shipment of Carolina cabbage has arrived and offered at $4 per large crate. Florida tomatoes are in good supply at $4.50 to $5.25 per six basket crate. Ontario roots are beginning to clean up but Southern new vegetables are plentiful.

MANITOBA MARKETS

WINNIPEG, April 5.—The coffee market is ruling firm and further advances have been recorded on Santos. Canned vegetables continue strong. Dried fruits are in good demand and supplies are becoming exhausted. Rolled oats are slightly easier while package cereals show no change. The sugar situation locally is in an unsettled condition. Molasses is steady with upward tendencies. Teas are holding strong with further evidence for higher prices. Oranges continue to advance. Good shipments of green vegetables are arriving.

STRONG TONE TO COFFEE

Winnipeg.

COFFEE.—Primary markets continue with a strong tone and a further advance of 1c per lb. has been recorded on Santos coffee. There are no new developments in the local market, but an improvement is noted in the demand.

CANNED GOODS STRONG

Winnipeg.

CANNED GOODS.—Canned vegetables continue firm. Tomatoes have advanced slightly and supplies are not considered sufficient to last until the new pack arrives. Good grades of peas are scarce and there is only a moderate stock of standards available. Corn remains unchanged with sufficient supplies to meet the demand. The canned fish market is unchanged with sockeye difficult to obtain from packers as European buyers have contracted for new pack at prices above last year's quotations. There is no change in the canned fruit situation, and a slight improvement is noted.

DRIED FRUITS ACTIVE

Winnipeg.

DRIED FRUITS.—The demand for dried fruits of all kinds is showing an improvement. Prunes are unchanged and firm under small supplies as the Prune Association is practically sold out. Peaches continue firm. The raisin market is quiet but supplies of these are expected to be well cleaned out in advance of the new crop.

ROLLED OATS EASIER

Winnipeg.

CEREALS.—Rolled oats are showing a slightly easier tone due to the dullness of the market. However, local prices are unchanged but if the market shows any further weakness local declines will follow. There is no change in package cereals but the lighter breakfast foods are showing more activity.

FLOUR MARKET UNSETTLED

Needs United Action to Save Salmon

Both Federal and Provincial Authorities Are Alive to Necessity for Constructive Action in Conserving B. C. Salmon Supply—Competition of the Japanese Pack

By B.C. Correspondent of Canadian Grocer

VANCOUVER, B. C., March 31.—In addressing a group of business men recently in Vancouver, F. E. Burke, manager of the Wallace Fisheries, gave a few figures on the salmon packing business that are of general interest.

"Very few of us," he said, "realize just what the salmon business means to British Columbia and to Canada. Until we saw the falling off in our packs, none of us were sufficiently concerned to acquaint ourselves with the vital position this industry holds in this Pacific Province. The industrial heads particularly have been uninformed as to the importance of the industry, largely, I suppose, because the canners made all their arrangements with the wholesalers. To show how closely the fishing business is interwoven with the industrial life of this province, let us take the returns for 1920. We find that one out of every twenty-six people in this province, regardless of color, earn their living directly in the fish business. If we add those whose living is indirectly made from the fish business, we will find how closely the salmon industry is interwoven with the industrial life of British Columbia, and anything that affects the salmon industry affects the whole prosperity of the province.

Surplus in Big Years Helped Lean Ones

"The conditions of today make it very difficult for the canners," continued Mr. Burke. "In the old days, the big years permitted a surplus with which to weather the lean years, and the average in the industry showed between 10 and 11 per cent. on the capital invested, not very high for a new and speculative industry in a new country. Today, should a big run produce a good profit, taxes would seize a share of the surplus, and the lean years, as the last few have been, find the canners ill-prepared to stand the incident losses.

Should Not Let Industry Sink

"I do not want to give the impression," said Mr. Burke, "that the whole canning industry is 'on the blink', or that the money invested is all gone. There will be salmon canneries in the province a long time after we are gone, but it will take enlightened and prompt action on the part of the officials and those immediately interested to see that the industry does not sink to be a very small factor in the life of the province—which will happen if the fish are depleted. The Columbia was fished out and many thought it was gone forever. Two years ago, due to intelligent effort, the Columbia river put up the biggest return that it ever put up in its history.

Governments Alive to Situation

"At last," said Mr. Burke, "we have reached the stage when the federal as well as the provincial authorities are alive to the necessity for constructive and united action if the fish wealth of this country is to be conserved.

"As an industry we have been through the blood-sweating process in the last two years—in common with other industries. We will not likely see the large packs that were put up other years, nor can we go on putting up with increased costs. Unless the packs can be sold at a profit there is no reason for putting up the packs. They must be sold in keen competition.

Competition of Japanese Packs

"The most serious factor probably is the Japanese Siberian pack. The Japs

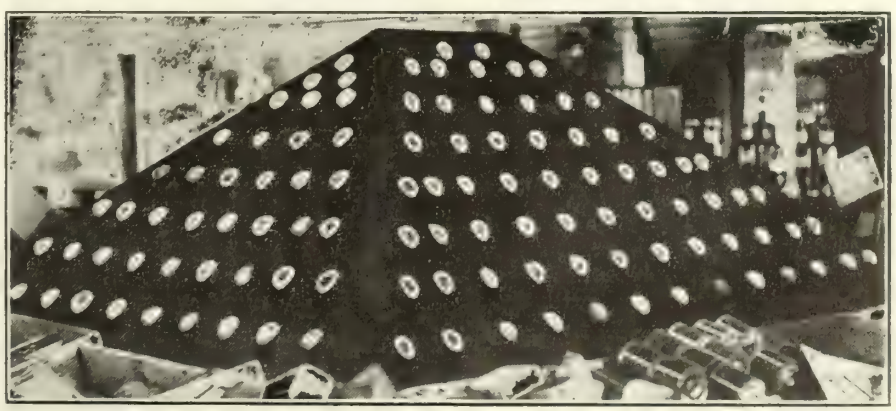
Novel Display of Eggs Sells 45 Cases

Many unique selling ideas have originated from the Paquet Co., Limited, Quebec, that have resulted in a satisfactory increase in sales on the particular commodity concentrated upon. One of the recent ones was a display of eggs. This display was very striking, as can be seen by the photograph. It was in the form of a quadrangle measuring eight feet long, six feet wide and three feet high. During the two days of the display sales of eggs amounted to forty-five cases, or 1,350 dozens of eggs.



Produce, Provision and Fish Markets

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, April 5.—The produce market is strong in almost all lines with many advances. Butter is the feature with an advance of four cents a pound in some cases. The market is strong with the likelihood of another advance in view of the heavy demand. Eggs are also strong under an advance. Hogs advanced in price late last week and then eased off again. Beef is strong with higher prices on fresh cuts of beef. Smoked meats are strong in anticipation of the Easter season. Lard is firm with a fair demand but no change in price. The cheese market locally is steady but the export market is more active. The poultry market shows some improvement but the movement has not been as large as was expected. The cold weather of last week improved the flow of maple syrup and the market is now well supplied, with prices easy.

BUTTER PRICE ADVANCES

Montreal

BUTTER.—The market is in a decidedly strong condition with an advance of 4½c. per lb. during the past week. This is almost entirely due to a shortage of storage supplies, not only locally, but throughout Canada, coupled with a steady demand for supplies to meet immediate requirements. From now until the new make is on the market butter may be expected to be strong in price since shipments of New Zealand creamery butter are not arriving in as large quantities as was expected.

CHEESE MARKET IMPROVED

Montreal.

CHEESE.—There is no change in the wholesale price of cheese. The export market shows a stronger tone and some improvement in the domestic demand. Cheese prices may be expected to hold firm.

EGG PRICES ADVANCE

Montreal.

EGGS.—The feature of the egg market was the strength that developed towards the close of last week and which prevails this week. An advance of from 1c. to 3c. per doz. is recorded, with new laid eggs quoted at 32c. and 33c. and specials at from 34c. to 37c. per doz. The strength is attributed to the fact that storing operations are becoming more general, coupled with the heavy consumption. The egg market is active and the strength may be expected to hold with a tendency towards another advance.

HOGS ADVANCE SLIGHTLY

Montreal.

FRESH MEATS.—Unlike other markets for live hogs, Montreal prices showed a decline only during the early part of last week but later advanced 25c. to 50c. per cwt. with sales of select light weight at $14.50 and $14.75. The price went as high as $15.00, weighed off cars, but later in the week declined in sympathy with the weakness in other markets and closed with a price of $14.25 to $14.50 for fed and watered, weighed off cars. The market now stands firm with a stronger tone in anticipation of a good demand for the Easter trade. There is an improved tone to the beef market. Prices show an advance with a shortage of better quality beef cattle. Shipments of western cattle are smaller than they have been and with the approach of Easter the market takes on a strong tone.

COOKED MEATS STEADY

Montreal.

COOKED MEATS.—There is no change in cooked meats. Prices are steady with only a fair demand but the prospects are for an improvement with the approach of Easter.

SMOKED MEATS FIRM

Montreal.

SMOKED MEATS.—The trade is looking forward to a big improvement in the demand for smoked and cured meats for the Easter season. Stocks in retailers hands are light and at present there is a fair demand for small lots to meet immediate requirements but the bigger buying is expected the beginning of next week. For this reason there is a stronger tone to smoked meats since the hog market has shown recent spurts of strength and should this become marked, it is expected to reflect in bacon, smoked hams and cured meats.

FRESH HALIBUT ADVANCE

Montreal

FISH.—The demand for fish is falling off with the close of the Lenten season. Locally the market is fair with the ordinary weekly movements but on the whole the movement is not large. Prices show an advance in fresh fish. Fresh halibut is higher at 23c. per lb. while frozen halibut is lower at 17c. Gaspe salmon is in fair supply at 18c. per lb. In frozen fish the market is well supplied with prices easy but fresh lots are strong in price with small offerings.

POULTRY PRICES UNCHANGED

Montreal.

POULTRY.—Receipts of live and fresh killed poultry have been light, but the supply of the former is ample to meet requirements, owing to the fact that the Jewish demand, during the holiday just past did not come up to expectations. A fair trade has been done in storage and dressed poultry, the demand being especially good for fowl and large chickens and supplies on the market are ample to meet all requirements There is no change in prices quoted locally.

MAPLE SYRUP EASY

Montreal.

MAPLE SYRUP.—The cold snap of last week has given the maple syrup makers an extra run and prospects are now for a record production this year. At the same time the demand is keen and as the market has been pretty well cleaned up before hand the new make is being quickly picked up. Prices in bulk on the local market vary from $1.25 to $1.50 a gallon according to the make. In the bush buyers are paying one dollar a gallon.

are making strenuous efforts to break into the British market. We cannot expect to produce canned fish on the basis of Japanese costs. We don't want to. We do not want to carry our labor to a point where, in order to compete, the Oriental standards of living would have to be maintained. No one wants that, no matter whether he has capital invested in the business, or not. We will have to overcome that competition by scientific methods, more expert production and better merchandising," said Mr. Burke.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, April 5.—A considerable increase in receipts featured the hog market during the week with the result that the big packers were enabled to put into effect the lower prices which they were endeavoring to do as intimated in last week's report. The hog market continues weak and there is likely to be another cut in prices by the end of the week, providing the heavy receipts continue. In smoked and dry salt meats, and cooked meats, the situation is fairly steady. Lard and shortening are also unchanged but there appears to be a slightly easier undertone. Butter is firm and higher, while cheese is unchanged. Eggs are inclined to be unsettled; the big dealers making efforts to reduce prices. Margarine is a shade reduced in price in some quarters. Poultry and fish are steady and quotations unchanged.

BUTTER MARKET HIGHER

Toronto.

BUTTER.—The market continues firm with quotations to the retail trade advanced one to two cents per pound. New Zealand and best grades of Ontario stock are bringing 42c. to 43c. per lb. with the under grades at 39c. to 41c.

LITTLE CHANGE IN EGGS

Toronto

EGGS.—The market held fairly steady during the week but some wholesale houses have been endeavoring to get prices to a lower basis of values. In this, however, they were unsuccessful, chiefly on account of the heavy demand and the fact that there is little surplus. Another factor entering the situation is that storage operations have commenced in a small way. Quotations to the trade remain at 31c. to 32c. per doz.

Toronto.

MARGARINE.—In some quarters quotations are reduced two cents per pound. Other brands, however, are unchanged. The reason for the reduction is said to be the result of a quiet demand and in order to stimulate buying a reduction is put in force. Quotations on the best grades range from 20c. to 22c. and second grades are bringing around 18c. per lb.

HOGS MOVE LOWER

Toronto.

FRESH MEATS.—Receipts of hogs at the Union Stock Yards during the week were heavier than the market could readily absorb. The result was that the big packers were able to put into effect the lower prices as intimated under this heading in last week's issue.

As we went to press last week the market had a weaker appearance on the basis of $13.75 fed and watered but the week closed with values reduced to the basis of $13. The aim of the big packers is to further reduce prices and it is intimated that by the end of the week another cut will be in force. Under fairly heavy buying of cattle for the Easter trade, values were somewhat higher.

When the time is up and the agreed upon notice has been sent—or if none is to be sent, then when the agreed time has arrived—allow four or five days grace. Then, if the account is not paid, close it—stop it—quit where you stand! Let me, however, say that if you do not send out bills, you should institute that practice at once. Bills always should be mailed to everybody so they will reach the customer by the first mail on the first of each month. The man who is first on the job of demanding his money is the one who is most apt to get it, and many a wobbly customer has been kept straight for years by being asked promptly to pay up.

Balances Most Dangerous Things

Have the account paid in full. If any partial payment is tendered, take it, of course; but then stop the account right there. Prompt action in this connection, right at the time, has rectified many a careless assumption, corrected many a false impression, led to complete understanding, made a slovenly customer systematic and cemented friendship which has continued through long years of mutual trading and good will. For it is true as preachin' that "short accounts make long friends," as the canny Scots say.

Now if, in any of these contingencies, the customer "gets mad," you are fortunate to find it out so soon, close the account, paid up or not, stop the loss at once and be quit of worry. It pays best to devote yourself to those who will trade with you your way. And if you stick to these rules, plenty will like your ways. You will soon find you have selected from your community the most reliable, most desirable and dependable people. Those are the only ones that deserve anybody's credit—and you only want the deserving ones.

Plans for special charges for credit don't work out. The cost of credit runs about this way, half per cent. for losses, half per cent for interest, one and one half per cent. for bookkeeping and collection and half per cent for unforeseen contingencies. This is a total of three per cent on your sales. People who want credit will trade with you on this basis of extra cost. The charges can be buried in anybody's prices by any skilful merchant so he will be in line with worthy competition—meaning competition which really might cut ice in your class of business. Credit costs something. Everybody understands that. Properly run it is worth what it costs—and people understand that also. Credit is a highly profitable business for those who understand how to handle it.

I shall be glad to have more detailed particulars if I have not hit the spot, and I shall try again.

SCHNEIDER'S MEAT PRODUCTS have DOUBLED MY SALES.....

says H. C. SMITH, aggressive Ontario Grocer

READ THIS LETTER THAT MR. SMITH SENT TO HIS CUSTOMERS—IT SPEAKS FOR ITSELF.

HERBERT C. SMITH

GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERY AND COOKED MEATS

Dear Madam:

It may interest you to know that in the past twelve months we have more than doubled our sales of cooked meats, sausage, bacon and pure kettle rendered lard. This, mind you, without the slightest attempt at advertising these commodities. We therefore think it not unreasonable on our part to say that the quality of the goods themselves, coupled with the satisfaction they give to our many customers, is wholly responsible for the increased business.

"Be sure you're RIGHT, then go ahead" is an excellent motto, and we assuredly did this when we decided to handle the famous Schneider line of meat products as put up by the firm of J. M. Schneider, and notwithstanding the persuasive tongue of the many meat salesmen who call on us, we stick right with the brand which has done so much to put our store on the map in the way of cooked meats.

If you have not already done so you owe it to yourself to give these QUALITY goods a trial and if you make that trial at this store you will be absolutely certain of getting the genuine Schneider products, because we handle nothing else. We have the best slicer money can buy, and are glad to slice your meats just the particular thickness suited to your fancy. WE DO NOT SLICE IN ADVANCE.

We await your further patronage with every confidence that we can satisfy your demands, and wish to thank you for past business.

Yours faithfully,
HERBERT C. SMITH.

Money-Saving Information

"The most useful information contained in any paper I get"—so a Western banker writes in to-day's mail, renewing his subscription for FINANCIAL POST.

"Very often," his letter goes on to say, "I am called on to suggest investments for small amounts, sometimes as low as a few hundreds, and I find your Investors' Inquiry Service a reliable partner to consult. If every investor knew there was such service at his call it would surely lessen the losses of many of these people."

The Investors' Inquiry Service fills just that need. Unless you are perfectly sure of your investments write us before you buy.

It costs FINANCIAL POST subscribers nothing to be sure before placing hard-earned savings in stocks that may never have a chance of paying dividends. UNCERTAINTY IN HOG MARKET

Hog receipts in all the five principal markets up to the middle of March show an increase as compared with the same period in 1921. The increase is particularly noted in the Western markets. The total receipts for Winnipeg, Calgary and Edmonton up to March 16 were 74,945, against 49,978 last year. Receipts at Toronto and Montreal for the same period totalled 96,603, as compared with 88,908 last year.

At the Union Stock Yards, Toronto, during the past week, receipts of hogs exceeded the previous week by 3,000. The big packers have been endeavoring to reduce prices for some time past and for the past couple of weeks have been able to do so on account of receipts being heavier than could readily be absorbed. In Ontario the supply of bacon hogs is estimated to be light but the supply in the West appears to be fairly plentiful, particularly of the non-bacon type. It appears that if receipts continue to increase, a lower price can be expected.

"We Don't Sell To Strangers!"

A traveling railroad employee once had an hour between trains to put in at a very small country town in an Eastern State. Feeling hungry, he located the General Store, and said to the proprietor: "I'd like to buy some of those apples." "We don't sell to strangers!" was the astonishing reply.

We're Different! We Do Sell to Strangers. We enter them in our Book of Friends, because the clean, straightforward, profitable SUNSET style of doing business makes and keeps for us an ever growing circle of real business friends.

Are You a Stranger to SUNSET? Get acquainted! Write us to-day for full particulars of the Household Dye that commands success by reason of its Merit. Please mention your Jobber's name.

QUICK SALES BIG PROFIT SMALL INVESTMENT

This new Mohican Counter Display Box is absolutely the best balloon proposition ever offered to the trade! It contains two dozen each of our three most popular numbers. The fact that they all retail at 5c each makes for an even movement of all three numbers, thus overcoming the outstanding disadvantage of most assortments—slow-selling numbers tied onto popular sellers.

ASK YOUR JOBBER FOR THIS NEW MOHICAN ASSORTMENT

But be sure to ask for ASSORTMENT K. If he hasn't got it we will ship your initial order direct on receipt of cash. If you send us your jobber's name we will send him full particulars.

Quality Backs Every Claim

There is one great and self-evident fact which every Palmolive dealer knows and appreciates. This is that Palmolive quality justifies every claim that can possibly be made for it.

It is blended from costly palm and olive oils, imported from overseas—the same historic cleansers discovered in ancient Egypt and used by Cleopatra.

The process is special and the final perfection of the science of soap making.

When a customer asks for "soap" hand out Palmolive. Answer the question, "Which is the best soap?" with a cake of "Palmolive." Concentrate on this great soap leader which is sure to give satisfaction and make permanent users. This gives you a volume business which requires maximum quantity orders which in turn allows the most advantageous buying.

Made in Canada

From Palm and Olive Oils

But selling Palmolive is the least of your troubles. The bulk of the enormous Palmolive demand is created by Palmolive selling publicity in leading Canadian publications.

You see the brilliant, big space Palmolive advertisements in your home paper and your customers see them too. When you admire one of the stunning Palmolive color pages in the popular National magazines, the newspaper advertisements and billboards, all Canada admires it also. Every claim made in these forceful, aggressive salesmen-in-print is backed by the individual quality of each Palmolive cake. Only the best can live in the white light of publicity which constantly shines on Palmolive. See a Palmolive salesman or ask your jobber today.

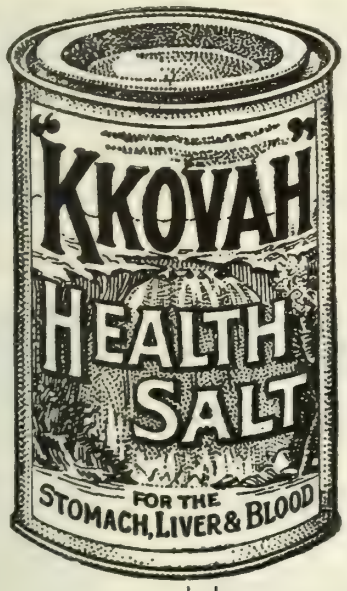
Do you stock?

"KKOVAH" HEALTH SALT



THE majority of Retailers now make it their staple line—as a Household Aperient. It gives satisfaction wherever it is sold, and they realize that a "Quality" Trade pays in the end.

With "KKOVAH" they know that being "a quick seller" there is a constant and Rapid Turnover of Capital—the only real source of genuine profit to the Retailer.

It is to be found in the majority of Homes throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion—if you don't stock it—then naturally—the other man is getting business which otherwise you would get.

Can Wholesaler Run Retail Chain?

Question Comes up Before the Wholesale Grocers' Guild of Montreal, by Reason of the Alleged Statement That a Wholesaler in That City Owns a Chain of Retail Stores, Selling to Them as Well as Other Retail Grocers

RECENTLY the Wholesale Grocers' Guild, of Montreal, held a meeting, and although the outcome of the discussion has been kept secret it is known that the problem of the chain store system, in connection with one particular chain in this city, was seriously reviewed. In connection with this chain in particular, the grievance is aggravated by the fact that the majority of retail grocers as well as the wholesalers are aware of the fact that the system is owned by a firm having fairly general recognition as wholesalers.

Wholesalers Take Matter Seriously

This problem has been discussed many times before in other cities but this is practically the first time that Montreal has had to deal with it in this form. The chain in question now comprises fifteen retail stores, which are concentrated in the north end of the city, with one in Verdun and mention of some others opening in the west end. In view of the fact that so many retailers are aware of the proprietorship of the chain and the publicity which quotes retail prices on well known brands below the cost to the retail trade is broadcast, local wholesalers have not only had many complaints from their customers but have felt the effects in their business.

Wholesaler Makes Threat

At the meeting held to discuss this matter, one local wholesaler made the statement that if the worst came to the worst and there should be only one way to fight the system whereby a retailer, large or small, was able to buy as a wholesaler and so disrupt the market for the legitimate retailer, he would take that means and establish a chain of stores himself. In speaking of this statement to Canadian Grocer later, this wholesaler said that it was unfair to the retail trade that an organization under guise of being wholesalers should own and operate retail stores for which they buy as wholesalers, not even keeping the two businesses separate, but turning the goods over to the distributors at cost and selling to the public at a price below the cost to the average retailer. "One or the other must go," he declared. "If the chain store system is to be dominant, then the grocery business is destined to become a monopoly and the public will be the sufferers. The question has many times been debated and it has been found that the most economical means of distribution is through the retail trade where competition has become the life of trade and the safeguard to the public's interest. I, for one, will fight the chain store system in as far as it is run under cover by a so-called wholesaler, and fight it to the last ditch. What my instrument of warfare will be I am not prepared to say but I will say that I have one."

Who Owns the Stores?

Canadian Grocer, endeavoring to get first hand information on all sides of the question, called the wholesale firm that was supposed to be proprietors of the chain of stores. One of the partners of the firm stated that they were in no position to give any information about the stores in question, that they didn't even know how many stores were in the system or who was manager of the stores. He denied emphatically that they owned any retail stores or had any interest in them apart from the fact that they sold them goods. Consequently Canadian Grocer representative called the manager of one of the stores and asked if he could get in touch with the general manager of the concern. This gentleman gave Canadian Grocer the name and telephone number of the member of the wholesale firm who had only a few minutes previously denied any connection with or knowledge of the fifteen retail grocery stores that are known in the city under one name.

What is a Wholesaler?

H. C. Beatty, secretary of the Wholesale Grocers' Guild of Montreal, when asked about the legality of a wholesaler operating a number of retail stores, said: "As far as I can see, it is legal but it is also impossible. The whole question arises out of the answer to 'What is a Wholesaler?' To my thinking a wholesaler is a distributor of products who does not own retail stores or does not sell in a retail way. If it is true that this so-called wholesale grocery firm owns and operates the retail stores, then it is certain that they are not wholesalers and they have no right to a charter as such. All I can say is that the local wholesalers are going into the question thoroughly and it is sure to be a fight."

Matter to be Taken Up

The subject is to be dealt with later at a date not yet set when representatives of the local wholesale and retail grocery trade will meet. It is hinted that wholesalers from other cities will also enter the discussion since the question is of importance to the trade throughout Canada.

These Retailers Want Equal Privileges in Buying as Are Enjoyed by the "Chains"

Claim They Will Not Handle Goods Advertised at Cut Prices by Chain Stores That Are Buying on Wholesaler's Basis—Do Not Want Protection But Equal Rights

MONTREAL, (Special).—Feeling is running high among many local retail grocers against the price cutting of the chain stores in this city. So far has this gone, that some of the grocers are boycotting some branded lines that are being used as features in the advertising of the chain system and they are pushing other brands. The claim of the retailers is not that the price competition is keen but that it is out of all reason since, according to them, the chain stores are buying under false pretences, at a price the individual retailer cannot get no matter in what quantity he is prepared to buy.

One Retailer's Policy

One grocer in Westmount, told Canadian Grocer he had decided he would not handle the brands that are being advertised at such ridiculously low prices by this chain of stores. "I can sell other brands very easily," he said, "by explaining the situation to my customers. It is not so very hard for a grocer to do that if he makes up his mind to carry it out. If they were able to sell at these prices because they were buying in larger quantities than I can afford to buy, I would not grumble, but I cannot get those prices no matter how heavily I buy. The whole thing is unfair to the individual retailer and something must be done if the present grocery system is to survive. So far I am not suffering but I can see what will happen in the future if present methods continue."

"If the manufacturers do not know the situation it must be brought to their attention and the quickest way I can see of doing it is to boycott their lines. Already it has had its effect in some cases. I have refused to handle a certain line that the chain stores have been advertising at below the price that I could buy. I told the traveler why I would not handle it and he stated that several other grocers had taken the same stand. A few days later the president of the company came to me himself. He offered to give me another discount if I kept the matter quiet. This I refused, knowing that I would be only compromising with the trouble and not solving it.

A Matter of Principle

"We did not come to terms in the long run and I still refuse to carry their line until they prove to me that that chain of stores buys it on the same basis that any other retailer does. This is only one of a number of lines that I and many other retailers are shunning in order to impress upon the manufacturers that some definite system of distribution, that has no loop-holes, must be established and adhered to. I am not prepared to say what that system should be—the more economical the better—but I do stipulate that it must be fair to all the retailers, large or small.

Thinks Their Demands not Unreasonable

"Our demands are not unreasonable. I am perfectly content to meet the honest price competition for I am convinced that one grocer can meet the price competition of another on service and quality, if not in price, provided the other grocer is not buying on a different basis."

Other retail grocers in this city spoken to are taking the same position with the result that the situation is becoming serious.

The grocers insist that they bear no grudge against the manufacturers and their products but they want to impress the fact upon some in particular that they all must be treated alike. The Wholesale Grocers' Guild of this city have taken up the question and have written a letter to manufacturers explaining the situation and asking that the matter be carefully considered.

Information has come to Canadian Grocer that news is being spread among the individual retailers that a certain manufacturer is selling direct to chain stores whose policy has been to sell through the wholesale trade. This the manufacturer denies emphatically. Apparently therefore there are some misapprehensions to be cleared up.

Adopts New Policy In Management of Montreal Grocery

Montreal.—Since the death of the late T. F. Hannan, the grocery store at 751 St. Catherine St., West, Montreal, has been under the management of Mrs. Hannan. J. E. Murray, who for the past few years has been a clerk in Chas. Macklaier's grocery store on St. James St., has joined the staff under Mrs. Hannan, taking the place of A. Pigeon who has opened his own store on the corner of Hibernia Road and Rushbrooke St., Point St. Charles.

With the change in the management of the store comes a change in policy. In the first place a meat department has been opened and fresh vegetables and fruit have for the first time been included in the stock. Another noticeable change is in the window displays and the displays in the store. In speaking of this to a Canadian Grocer representative, Mrs. Hannan said, "I have learned already that good window displays and price tickets on the goods are essential in getting the best results. My husband always had the idea that to fill the window up with goods and put the price on everything would be cheapening the appearance of the store. That may or may be so but to-day, I believe, the absence of price tickets drives away trade and I am going to see that everything bears the price in large figures.

More Window Displays

"We had a finely polished inlaid hard wood floor in our window. It was really a beautiful piece of work but it did not sell goods. I have had a false floor built that rests on the old one with the back about eighteen inches higher than the front. This we fill with fresh vegetables, fruits, meat and canned goods, all ticketed. Already we have noticed an improvement of sales and we hope to continue improving them by better sales windows."

Says Present Conditions Call For a Cash Business

Victoria, B. C.—H. W. Walker, who purchased the E. R. Clowser business at 950 Commercial Drive, Vancouver, is having the whole store remodeled and decorated, adopting the firm style of "Walker's Cash Supply House."

Speaking of the change in business conditions in recent years, Mr. Walker, who spent 25 years in the trade in Victoria said that the present conditions necessitate a cash business. "Years ago, we used to do a family business," Mr. Walker remarked, "and more often than not a credit business. Our bills, though, were always promptly paid there being a certain amount of pride among people that would keep them from becoming debtors to their grocer.

"Now, with the ever changing population of each district, and a seemingly lax view of debt, the risk is so great that the grocer is unjust to himself to give credit. The credit business is pleasant business, and steady business. When the customers are financially sound and morally good there is no more satisfactory way to do business, but when the slump comes the losses are high. Some are willing and desirous of paying their bills—and cannot. Many are unresponsible and make no effort to pay their way. Altogether, the present times force the retailer to do a cash business—as I propose to do."

CHANGE IN LEA AND PERRINS

The Lea and Perrin business in Canada, which has been conducted by Harold Seddon for some years has been taken over by Lea and Perrins Limited, the change taking effect April 1. It is the intention of the company to follow the same methods of distribution that have been in effect and to retain the present brokers. Mr. Seddon has been appointed managing director of the company.

Will Fixing Resale Price be Unlawful?

Bill is Now Before Ontario Legislature Prohibiting Manufacturers, Wholesalers and Retailers From Agreeing Upon a Set or Fixed Price—Views Are Expressed on Both Sides of the Subject

TORONTO.—A bill in relation to the fixing of prices was introduced into the Legislature last week by Hon. W. E. Raney, Attorney-General of Ontario, and was given its first reading. This bill provides that every agreement entered into between manufacturer, wholesaler or retailer, with the object of establishing or maintaining any set or fixed retail prices which may later become a fixed or common price is declared unlawful.

It will make null and void any agreement entered into by any person engaged in trade, commerce or manufacture in Ontario with any other person which has a condition of purchase of any article that such other person—

(a) Shall not sell or lease such article except at or upon or at less than any stated, fixed or common price, or price which may become later fixed or common.

(b) Shall receive or be or become entitled to any bonus, discount, rebate, reduction in price, prize, right or privilege or any concession or reward whatsoever by reason of such other person undertaking to resell or having resold such article at any stated, fixed or common price or which may later become stated, fixed or common.

(c) Shall pay or be subject to or be or become liable for any penalty, increased cost, loss, expense, deduction, disadvantage or disability whatsoever by reason of such other person not undertaking to resell or not having resold such article at any stated, fixed or common price—is declared to be unlawful.

Mr. Roebuck Explains Act

A. W. Roebuck, who conducted the case for the Board of Commerce in the trial of the Board of Commerce versus the Manufacturers and Wholesalers in regards to combines and price maintenance at Hamilton in 1920 and also for the Attorney-General's Department in the case of the Attorney-General of Ontario versus the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association and certain manufacturers held in Toronto in 1921, in an interview with a representative of Canadian Grocer, stated that "this bill does not prevent manufacturers from agreeing among themselves upon a price at which their goods should be sold, but it would prevent any agreement between manufacturers and wholesalers and wholesalers and retailers in regards to a fixed price on any article after that article has left the ownership of the manufacturer in the one case and wholesaler in the other."

Mr. Roebuck pointed out that although manufacturers were not prevented from agreeing upon a fixed price among themselves, this bill did not permit them to do so unless it was lawful and at the present time, the law in this regard is not definite as Mr. Justice Orde has not yet given his judgment in the case of the Attorney-General's department versus the Wholesale Grocers' Association which has been standing since a year ago, and upon which this question hinges.

Public Has Right Of Competition

Mr. Roebuck maintains that the public has the right of competition in all articles after manufacturers or wholesalers have parted with the ownership of the same, and that the manufacturers and wholesalers have no right to enter other lines of business, which they are doing when they compel a wholesaler and retailer to make a contract or agreement that they will sell their goods at a stated price or failing to do that, the wholesaler and retailer are penalized to the extent that they will no longer be permitted to sell those goods.

The bill provides for damages and penalties, Mr. Roebuck pointed out. Any person entering such an agreement whether within or without Ontario is liable to any person not a party of it, who is injured thereby, for three-fold the damages suffered, and an action for recovery of such damages may be entered in any court of competent jurisdiction, nothwithstanding that the amount recovered may be within the competency of an inferior court.

Money owed as a result of any such agreements or transactions in consequence thereof is to be forfeited to the Crown.

In regards to a wholesaler or retailer buying goods from a manufacturer situated in another province, and who sells his goods on the price maintenance basis, Mr. Roebuck remarked, that such transactions become unlawful and that the manufacturer could not collect his money in any court in Ontario but that such money would be paid into the court and become the property of the Crown.

Thinks Manufacturers Have Right

W. C. Miller, provincial secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association, in an interview with Canadian Grocer on the bill recently introduced by Hon. W. E. Raney which provides that manufacturers and others will be prohibited from naming a re-sale price on their products, declared that every manufacturer had a perfect right to name a price at which his goods should reach the consumer, providing of course, that the price was not exorbitant. Mr. Miller pointed out that if manufacturers were not permitted to set the re-sale price on their products it would mean that every price cutter would be able to take a well known advertised brand, upon which a manufacturer had spent a great deal of money to build up a big sale through quality and advertising, and use that line as a bait by cutting the price below the wholesale cost. "This would mean that the retailer who was getting a legitimate profit on that line would have to sell at a loss or eliminate that line from his stock entirely," said Mr. Miller. "There is no one better able to judge what is the true value of an article than the manufacturer and by putting a re-sale price on his article he not only eliminates price cutters from using that line as a bait but assists the retailer in getting a fair profit."

Robert Dowson, retail grocer, Toronto, said that in his opinion, manufacturers placing a re-sale price on their goods was fair to the retailer and the consumer. He stated an instance of the price being marked on package teas and said there was practically no price cutting on that line because the manufacturer had marked the price plainly upon it and everyone knew the price. He said that if any retailer was caught cutting that price, he immediately was cut off from getting supplies. This, in Mr. Dowson's opinion, was quite right and both the retailer and the consumer knew the correct price.

Denies Right of Manufacturer

"Manufacturers have no right to say what price I shall sell goods for," stated W. F. Morley, wholesale grocery broker, Toronto, to a representative of Canadian Grocer. "When I buy a line of goods and pay for them, those goods are mine and no person shall dictate to me at what price I shall sell them for. Every market should be wide open and if I can buy an article at a lower price than someone else that is my privilege and the same with selling. Mr. Raney's bill is one of the best pieces of legislature put before the House this session and I am heartily in favor of it passing."

Sell at Price They Like

Interviewing the manager of the grocery department of a large departmental store on the proposed new legislation in Ontario in regard to the fixing of the re-sale price of an article, he told Canadian Grocer that in his department they bought from whom they preferred, and sold at prices they themselves fixed. "No one dictates to us as to what price we must sell at," he remarked. "If you buy a suit of clothes and choose to sell it again, don't you think you should sell it at whatever price you wish?" he asked. "I think any attempt to fix the re-sale price is on a par with the demands of trade unions who declare that they must have certain wages, irrespective of whether other people starve or not. I don't see why legislation should be necessary in a matter of this kind. If the manufacturer sold direct to the retailer at his own price, and let the retailer sell at whatever he considers a fair profit, it would not be necessary. However, under present existing circumstances, I think such legislation will be a benefit."

A. C. Pyke, secretary of the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association had only seen press notices of the proposed legislation, and did not care to express any opinions in regard to the same until he had received a copy of the Bill. However, the Wholesale Grocers' Association believes that the fixing of re-sale prices is necessary in the best interests of both retailers and consumers. They contend that if there was not some attempt made at price maintenance there would be such cutting and slashing of prices that would be disastrous. Members of the association are consequently opposed to any legislation that would eliminate the fixing of re-sale prices, but were not prepared to state just what action would be taken in the way of pressing their opposition.

What is the Manufacturer's Position in Regard to Trade Discounts?

Question of the Right of Manufacturers to Distinguish Between Wholesalers and Retailers Has Been Before the Federal Trade Commission in the United States

THE QUESTION as to whether a manufacturer should have the right to distinguish between wholesalers and retailers in the matter of trade discounts, has been brought prominently to the front in the United States. In view of the legislation re Price Maintenance which the Ontario government is sponsoring, this new problem is one of exceedingly important interest in Canada.

If the rulings of the Federal Trade Commission in its case against The Mennen Company are finally sustained, it is clear that wholesale revision of selling policies will be in order across the line and the practically universal custom of classifying customers as "wholesalers" and "retailers" will go by the board. Incidentally, it is also clear that the provisions of the Clayton Act and the Federal Trade Commission Act will prove much more revolutionary than has hitherto been suspected. The text of the Commission's findings and conclusions in the Mennen case discloses an interpretation of the law that is quite without precedent, according to "Printers' Ink," for neither the Commission nor any court has ever issued such an order before.

Discounts Must be Same

Briefly stated, the ruling is this: That if a manufacturer of branded goods of uniform quality gives any quantity discounts at all, he must extend the same discount to all purchasers of the same quantity, no matter what the trade status of the purchaser may be. The manufacturer of soap, for example, must offer exactly the same set of discounts to all purchasers in quantity—large consumers, such as laundries and hotels, department stores, chain store retailers, co-operative or mutual buying clubs, and old-line jobbers or wholesalers. He can refuse to sell to any of those classes of trade, but if he sells to them at all the price must be the same for a given quantity of goods, providing there is no difference in the quality.

The provision of law upon which the above interpretation is based is that section of the Clayton Act that forbids discriminations in price between customers except on account of differences in the grade, the quantity, or quality of the commodity sold; or such as make only due allowance for difference in the cost of selling or transportation; or are made in good faith to meet competition; or represent the selection of customers in bonafide transactions not in restraint of trade. That last clause, at least, has always been supposed to afford plenty of room for classification of customers as entitled to the "wholesale" or the "retail" discounts. According to the Mennen case, however, it appears that the only "selection of customers" contemplated is the decision as to whether or not they will be permitted to buy the goods direct. If they are allowed to buy direct at all, they must be given the same discounts as anybody else.

Different From Former Idea

"Printers' Ink," adds that it is needless to point out, this is quite at variance with the common understanding of the intention of the law, and it is doubtful if Congress had any such intention when the law was passed. Counsel for The Mennen Company made an exhaustive search of the records of committee hearings in which this section was discussed, and also of the debates in the House and Senate. Many excerpts were presented in the company's brief in the effort to show that it was the intention of Congress to prevent the use of arbitrary price discriminations as a weapon of monopoly; not to provide for absolutely uniform trade discounts, nor to prevent the customary classification of purchasers into convenient groups. This aspect of the matter is not discussed by the Commission, however, which bases its order wholly upon the facts in the case. The precise meaning of the law, and the intention of Congress in framing it, is left to the courts to determine.

The facts upon which the order is based are, briefly, as follows: Since 1917 The Mennen Company has classified its customers in two groups—wholesalers and retailers—and has maintained two sets of discounts. Retail discounts roughly speaking, stopped at 10 per cent., while wholesalers were grantetd discounts beginning at 15 per cent., and, on large quantities, running as high as 17 per cent. There are, however, a number of "mutual" or "co-operative" organizations of retailers, which buy goods in large quantities and distribute them to members in the same manner as the old line wholesalers. These organizations, however, have been classified as "retailers," and have been refused the scale of discounts offered to "wholesalers." This, the Commission holds, is an unfair discrimination against such organizations, tending to restrain competition, and to deprive them of trade. The company is therefore ordered to "cease and desist" from further discrimination in prices based upon classifications of its customers.

Past Counsellor E. M. Carroll presented Past Counsellor T. R. Crayton with a past counsellor's jewel, and Counsellor Crayton was elected delegate to the Supreme Council sessions at Columbus in June.

The membership of the organization numbers 105,000 in Canada and the United States, and the local council, which was instituted about two years ago, is growing rapidly.

JAPANESE SALMON INDUSTRY

The Japanese salmon industry is of great interest to Canadians owing to the fact that Japan is now putting up a large pack every year and becoming a formidable competitor in the British salmon market. The waters where the largest quantities of salmon are caught are along the shores of the Northern Saghalien and at the mouth of the Amur River, where it is said that in the year 1913, the last for which reliable statistics have been published, some 47,600 tons of the salmon, raw weight, were caught.

Freight is Part of First Cost of Goods

Freight Charges Must Not be Characterized as Expense—They Should be Added to Each Invoice, Figured Into the Cost of Each Article and Thereby Brought Right Back Into the Business by the Shortest Route

By HENRY JOHNSON, Jr.

THIS STORY is very well told in limited space:

Dear Mr. Johnson:—Some reports of our company are enclosed for digestion. This company was organized in 1899 for five years, re-organized in 1903 for 20 years. Situated out eight to ten miles from town on a country cross roads; have half an acre of ground, a seven roomed dwelling, store building 40 by 40, 1½ stories, warerooms 20 by 40 and 20 by 20: double garage 18 by 20, hen house 12 by 18 all in good repair. Last year we organized an electric light line from our post office town so we have everything lighted with electricity now. We have always paid 6 per cent. on capital stock and left balance in business until 1916 when we bought a share in a co operative wholesale grocery company for $333. Since then we have received $800 in preferred stock drawing 8 per cent. interest from this source. In the last five years we have paid our stockholders 90 per cent. in dividends and still have $13,442.05 in surplus funds. Last year we lost $1,-602.86, due mostly to depreciation in stock values. Our annual report runs from January to January 1st and invoices from January 12 and January 11, so there is a slight discrepancy in the two.

Several interesting things appear in the detailed statements, which I do not copy because of length, also because I feel that this man is pretty well able to care for himself.

Sales in 1920 were 46,205.14 on expenses of $3,037.42. That figures the trifling percentage of 6.57 plus. Sales in 1921 fell off $15,381.37 or just about one-third, due undoubtedly in large measure to shrinking values. Probably the volume actually handled was nearly as large as in the former year. But the expenses of 1921 were practically the same in dollars as in 1920, with the result that the ratio crept up to 9.74 per cent plus.

Depreciation Not Accounted For

There is no account taken of interest on investment. Perhaps that is supposed to be cared for through the dividend account, so I shall pass it. But depreciation should always be figured. Property worth $2,700 in 1920 may not have depreciated in value. It may be worth more now than formerly. Just the same, it is good business to wipe out a little of it for good measure, as I think I can illustrate from these two statements.

For here we find no depreciation taken on fixtures or delivery equipment. Both are subject to considerable, especially the trucks. The inventory figures for the two years show combined fixtures and truck accounts total $3,794, or an annual average of $1,897. Depreciation of only ten per cent. on the combined items would have carried $189.70 into expenses last year and another $189.70 this year—total $379.40. That this would have been conservative is shown by the $7.25 charged to truck repairs last year and $293.30 this year—total, $300.55.

There is no good sense in dodging this account. It will come up anyway. A proper annual depreciation charge will enable us to prepare for its fluctuations and contingencies, and we shall not be caught napping when extra repairs loom up. The proper insertion of this charge, as I have indicated it, would have increased expense ratio in 1920 to 7 per cent. and reduced 1921 to just over 9 per cent. The actual figures would have worked even greater alterations than this, because the correct charge against delivery equipment of all kinds is 20 per cent a year and inside equipment, 10 per cent.

Freight is Not Expense

Here is another man who runs freight into his expense acccount. Why? It is dangerous—extremely dangerous—to do this. Freight is a part of the first cost of the goods. It should be added to each invoice, figured into the cost of each article and thereby brought right back into the business by the shortest route. When this system is followed, there is no guesswork. The price made—if correctly figured—covers invoice and transportation cost. If freight is considered as expense, by what means will you get this outlay back again?

A merchant who runs a general store which leans heavily on groceries in a small town sends me a statement so nicely written in detail that I copy it entire. I do this the more gladly because, like numbers of others, he says he will be glad to "reimburse" me for my trouble, and I want to emphasize the fact that my compensation comes through the publisher of Canadian Grocer and the satisfaction I get out of being of any service to merchants anywhere. So please "forget" the compensation or "reimbursement" end of it. Just send in your problems. I shall be most happy to handle them and glad if I can do any good for you. Here's this man's statement:

Summary For 1921

Cash sales, $22,881.34; credit sales, $50,550.76; total, $73,432.10 Mdse. sold at less than 10 per cent. profit, $5,843.37.

Open Accounts due 30ds	3011.84
Notes payable at Bank	1200.00	10,186.96
Net Worth		$38,751.78

NOTE:—Salaries include wages for proprietor. Mdse. sold at less than 10 per cent. is goods sold less than regular profit. Stock inventory, 1920, was $13.-734.69.

Playing Even Last Year Was Not Bad

If stock last year is added to purchases and stock end of 1921 is deducted, we shall have $59,319.04 as cost of goods sold for $73,432.10 and that will show gross earnings of $14,113.06, or 19 per cent plus on sales. That is $85.41 less than the expenses listed above. This shows margins which total just about 19 per cent .on sales as against expenses of over 19-1/3 per cent. So it seems plain that no profit was made last year.

I cannot say this is conclusive, because I have no figures of net worth a year ago Obviously this man is far from the poor house. If he has failed to make any real money last year, he is in some very good company, for there are lots of others. Also it is hard to criticize the affairs of anybody who shows that he knows so well how to make progress. So what I shall say will be suggestive, merely, except as to one thing; freight.

Here again we have this item in with the expenses. If transportation has been added to cost of merchandise—as it must be in any sound business—it certainly does not belong in expenses. If

Watch Cereals in Warm Weather

CEREALS ARE difficult to keep properly in the store during the warm weather. Merchants should from now on watch their stocks very carefully to see that they do not become webby, because once the web appears life soon follows.

A grocer who has spent 58 years in the business and who has made a study of cereals as well as every other line in the grocery business, states that there is life in all cereals, that if there were not they would not be of much food value. He did not think, however, that retailers should lose money on this account and in his opinion it was up to the merchant to see that cereals were properly taken care of in the store to prevent life appearing in the drawers and other containers used.

Every once in a while, he stated, his staff cleaned out thoroughly all bins that were used for cereals. They were brushed with a whisk so that when the new product was dumped in there would be no chance of it being contaminated by old stock that had not been thoroughly cleaned out. This is a precaution that would pay every merchant to take at this time of year and later on during the warm months of the summer season.

Freight Reduction

THE SURVIVAL of the Western Canada farmer is dependent on a reduction in present freight rates, according to the statement of the Hon. A. B. Hudson, M.P. of Winnipeg. The Hon. Mr. Hudson in addressing the Toronto Canadian Club this week on the subject of Western Problems, declared that unless freight rates are reduced, the farmer in the West cannot carry on.

He pointed out, in the course of his remarks, that the proportion of grain grown in Western Canada that was consumed in Canada is quite small, and the bulk of the crop has to be sent to Europe. The shortest rail haul in the prairie provinces before it reached a point available for water carriage is from Winnipeg to Fort William, a distance of about 400 miles, but the distance of the rail haul is generally very much longer. Argentine and Australia, the competitors of Western Canada in the European grain markets, have to transport their grain very short distances. In the case of the Argentine the longest distance is about 300 miles, the average distance being a good deal less than that.

The Western Canada farmer is undoubtedly handicapped in the matter of long hauls, and consequently suffers adversely from the higher rates. He is handicapped not only in the way of shipping out his own products but also in respect to the goods which he uses. These goods have to be brought in from the East, from the United States and from Europe, and the Westerner has to pay the freight charges. The question of freight rates is a serious question will inspire the people of the West with some hope and the promise of the Dominion government to shortly appoint a special committee to investigate the freight rate question will inspire the people of the West with some hope of relief from what they find are excessive freight charges and which they claim operate against their property.

Will Follow the Markets by Radio?

NEWSPAPERS are all broadcasting news and musical programs these days by wireless telephone sets which they have installed. Amateurs all over the Province have put up "aerials," and it has been reported that some enthusiasts have utilized the old bed spring with which to snatch the messages out of the air.

It will be interesting when trade papers come to the point of entrusting the day's market information to the ether, so that the retailers in Fort Fraser, Peace River Crossing, Prince Albert, Welland and Chicoutimi, or any other place may, by simply putting the head-phones over their ears, be advised of the market trend of cocoanut in Ceylon, or sardines in Sardinia, learn how the rabbit crop in Australia will likely affect the prices of Electric Seal, or how the strike of elephant hunters in South Africa will paralyze the French Ivory trade for next Christmas.

Won't it be interesting, when one is tuning up his little mail-order set, to run through the various wave-lengths used by the various papers? As you pass through the 200 metre length used by the Financial Post a bit of the Wall Street market trickles through, but as you turn through to the 360 meter wave, Druggists' Weekly contributes a bit, till Hardware and Metal, and Dry Goods Review, then Canadian Grocer with its 2,000 meter wave length is finally turned in. It might be something like this:—

Z Z Z Z "Hello, hello, hello. This is the FINANCIAL POST broadcast. The feature of to-day's market is an announcement by" Z Z Z "prominent cosmetic manufacturers that prices on rouges and pencils have been reduced" Z Z Z "and as a Paint Up and Clean Up week has been set by the 'Save the Surface and you save all' committee, we expect" Z Z "many radical changes in women's street wear have been forecast to a Dry Goods Review correspondent and" Z Z "old prunes will soon all be cleaned up," says the Canadian Grocer broadcast.

It is going to be interesting, isn't it?

COMPLETES 21 YEARS SERVICE

Toronto.—At the office of the Red Rose Tea Company on Saturday morning last, Robert W. Vout, one of the Ontario traveling salesmen, was honored by being presented with a handsome solid gold watch and chain. The occasion was completion of 21 years service with the firm. A letter of appreciation of the services of Mr. Vout from president T. H. Estabrooks of St. John, N. B., was read, and the presentation made by Charles T. Miller, Toronto manager. The engraving on the watch referred to Mr. Vout's 21 years service and his constant loyalty.

NEW GROCETERIA IN THE DANFORTH DISTRICT TORONTO

Toronto.—A new Groceteria has opened in the Danforth district. This store is operated on the system of entering through a turnstile, picking up a basket, wait on yourself and going out hrough another turnstile. As the customer passes out, the goods are checked, the amount is rung up on the cash register and the goods then placed in one large paper bag. The store goes under the name of Buy-Rite.

An innovation in this store is the fresh meat department. This section is fitted up with a refrigerator system connected with the display counters and the large refrigerator wherein is kept the surplus supply of meats.

The store is finished in white and has an attractive appearance. It is in reali y two stores with a connecting archway between the stores. The store frontage is approximately fifty feet.

This is the first store of which several are expected to be opened in various sections of the city. The company operating the system is a limited liability company and shares are being sold to citizens.

The officers of the company are as follows: President, J. C. Knowles; vice-president, James Scott, secretary-treasurer, W. R. Scott.

Letters to the Editor

Transient Traders Act

Editor Canadian Grocer:—

Would you kindly advise me if you can secure such data, what cities under 50,000 population do in regard to the transient traders license? Are there special laws governing cities of that population?

Malcolm J. Allen

Niagara Falls, Ont., For the Grocers' Association of Niagara Falls.

Editor's Note.—By-laws may be passed by the councils of towns, townships, villages and cities having a population of less than 10,000 and by boards of commissioners of police in cities having a population of not less than 10,000.

The Transient Traders Act is as follows:

For licensing, regulating and governing transient traders and other persons whose names have not been entered on the assessment roll in respect of income or business assessment for the then current year; and who offer goods, wares or merchandise for sale by auction, conducted by themselves or by a licensed auctioneer or otherwise, or who offer them for sale in any other manner.

For requiring transient traders and other persons whose names are not entered on the assessment roll or are entered on it for the first time, in respect of income or business assessment, who so offer goods, wares or merchandise for sale, to pay a license fee before commencing the trade.

(a) A by-law passed under paragraphs 6 or 7 shall not apply to the sale of the stock of an insolvent which is being sold or disposed of within the county or district in which he carried on business therewith at the time of the issue of an attachment or of the execution of an assignment.

(b) "Transient Traders" shall include any person commencing business who has not resided continuously in the municipality for at least three months next preceding the time of his commencing such business there.

(c) The fee to be paid for a license under paragraph 7 shall not exceed in a city or town $250., in a village in unorganized territory $200, and in other local municipalities $100.

(d) The sum paid for a license shall be credited to the person paying it on account of taxes thereafter payable by him. 3-4 Geo. V. o. 43. S. 420.

The Retail Merchants Association are endeavoring at the present time to get an amendment to this Act and it is now before the House.

After the words "income or business assessment" in the first and second paragraphs, the R. M. A. want the words "or as owner of real property" added. This is for the reason, that as the law now stands there is nothing to prevent a trader going into a town, renting a window or a portion of a store and placing his goods on sale to the detriment of local merchants. The words "or owner of real property" will prevent this as it means that the goods offered for sale must be the property of the owner or tenant of the store.

Income Tax Based on Net Earnings

Editor, Canadian Grocer:—

I appreciate your advice in last week's issue about making out the Income Tax statement. There are, however, one of two points I am not quite sure about.

I am now taking stock. Is it right and proper to value the goods at replacement cost? Suppose I find four or five thousand dollars loss on the year's business, does my loss go to my credit on the tax account, or do I pay on the gross income from the business? I have seen a statement. There are, however, one or to deduct losses. This does not appear fair to me.

Enquirer.

Editor's Note:—Inventories should always be figured at replacement cost. That is the only way you can get an accurate statement of your business. This also enables you to write off at once any losses you may have through falling markets. If the business shows a loss during the year, it will show in the yearly balance sheet.

The amount of Income Tax you should pay is based on your net earnings and not on the gross earnings of the business. Therefore if the business has not shown a profit, there is no Income Tax to pay.

Charge Goods to Expense Account

Editor, Canadian Grocer:—

I was interested in your article in last week's issue "Making your Income Tax returns." I have been following this plan as outlined very closely, but there has been one point that was not always clear. For instance the item, "Add cost of all goods bought for re-sale." Now suppose that some of these goods bought for re-sale are actually used up about the store, and thus are charged to expense account, i.e. oats for horses, brooms, etc. Should the total of such goods used about the store but were bought originally for re sale, be deducted from the item "Add goods bought for re-sale," before being charged to expense account? For instance we used approximately $400 worth of goods in this way last year and you see it would make a difference in profit according to whether such goods were or were not deducted. My own opinion is now that if the goods were originally charged to the Stock Account, they should be deducted therefrom if they are subsequently used for expense and therefore charged to expense account.

Granby, Que.

W. R. B.

Editor's Note.—All goods bought for re-sale should certainly be charged to the Merchandise Account. Now if some of these goods are taken out of stock to be used around the store, they should be charged to the Expense Account just the same as though it was actual money taken out of the Bank Account to pay some part of the running expenses of the business. It is not necessary to deduct from the Merchandise Account. Goods so charged to the Expense Account, however, should be charged at the regular re-sale price or at least at a price that will cover the invoice cost and selling expenses.

Who Can Solve This?

Editor, Canadian Grocer:—

We have a problem in connection with our business that we would be glad to have advice on.

A large portion of our business is done on the credit plan and we would like to make some of our customers pay up sharper and pay for the extra time we give them.

We tried an extra charge of two per cent. on all bills bought on credit with a rebate of two per cent. if the bill was paid in full inside of thirty days.

This had the effect of making those who could pay cash inclined to wait the thirty days as they got the same price. Some of our customers got mad because we should have any doubts of their prompt settlement and objected to the extra charge.

We have been reading a recent letter in Canadian Grocer from a merchant who says he marks his goods on the idea of two months credit being given and discounts for cash. We can see that this would work well on bills of considerable size, but would it not be inconvenient on small cash purchases, say of five or ten cents or anything less than one dollar. Then if goods are marked at the credit price, if the competition is as strong as it is here, it will show the goods higher than the other merchant who does a cash business, and the opinion would then be that our prices were too high.

We would like to so arrange our business that the credit business customers will pay for the extra cost of bookkeeping, interest, etc., and to encourage the trade of good customers and to discourage those who are always overdue. Any assistance you can give through your valuable paper will be welcome.

A Constant Reader.

Editor's Note.—We will be glad to have merchants' views on this subject.

B. C. Retailers Will Hold Annual Convention in Victoria This Year

R. M. A. Executive Meets and Discusses Many Matters of Importance to the Retailer—Will Seek Legislation Along Several Lines Vital to the Trade in British Columbia

VANCOUVER, B. C., April 8.—It was decided at the session of the executive of British Columbia R. M. A., held in Vancouver recently to hold the annual convention in Victoria in July. The executive will meet again in May.

Still Undecided

G. H. McRobbie, British Columbia's representative on the Dominion Board presented an exhaustive report on the sales tax issue. He referred particularly to the fact that although the association had been successful in two courts, and had also been successful in getting the government to cancel the arrears of the sales tax against confectioners, florists and furriers from May 1920, at the present time the issue as to the interpretation of the word "manufacturer" still remained undecided, and unless the R.M.A's efforts to have the present sales tax amended at the present session of the House were successful, the various lines of business affected would be called upon to pay a sales tax of 3 per cent. on the entire turnover as from April 1, 1922.

Selling to Consumers

Mr. Hougham tabled evidence of different wholesalers in the Province, who were selling to consumers, using these instances to prove a general practice of such dealing.

The meeting went on record as being in favor of a system of retail licenses controlled by the federal government, similar to the licensing system adopted by the Canada Food Board, under which it was illegal for wholesale houses to sell any person without a license. It was recognized that the wholesale houses themselves were frequently called upon to meet conditions in which they were asked to sell parties outside of the regular retail field, and it was thought that they would welcome some such measure of relief.

Other Legislation

Provincial President J. T. Crowder detailed the activities of the organisation with respect to the personal property tax and what measures were proposed for the future.

The government will be asked to extend the provisions of the Trading Stamp Act to apply to manufacturers as well as retailers. At present manufacturers have the right to issue coupons.

The Victoria branch tabled a resolution to request the Provincial Government to pass a provincial Lord's Day Act, giving the right to municipalities to control Sunday trading, subject to a referendum to the people. The opinion of all the branches and trade sections will be sought by the provincial executive and the matter will come up for consideration at the provincial convention.

F. T. McDowell dealt with the subject of Oriental exclusion. The initiative taken by the R. M. A. in calling for the reorganisation of the exclusion league on the basis of representation of organized bodies pledged to a definite programme of education and backed by adequate financial resources was endorsed and the branches throughout the province will be immediately requested to appropriate funds to enable the R. M. A. to make its proper contribution to the finances of the league.

In this connection it will undoubtedly be of interest to note that within the last few weeks one of the largest of the Chinese grocers in Vancouver has moved to new and larger premises, and opened a basement groceteria where the help is white girls.

Western

G. Haworth has succeeded M. R. Ottley in Port Moody.

The business at 2607 Broadway, west, Vancouver, has changed hands. S. Paul has bought out S. Hutchinson.

D. F. Sinclair succeeds Jas. Fletcher in the business conducted at 924 Granville Street, Vancouver.

Palmer and Graves have bought out the business of Tennant Brothers at 7468 Fraser Avenue, South Vancouver.

R. Alexander's business at Birch Island, B. C., will in future be conducted by T. J. McCracken.

W. Waltham has sold out his business at New Westminster, B. C., to C. R. Talpey.

H. M. Butler has moved from 999 Broadway West, Vancouver, to 3,047 Granville St.

Stephenson-Russell Limited, have removed from 57 Victoria Street, to larger quarters at 124 King Street, Winnipeg. They occupy all the building at the latter address which is on the Market Square.

J. A. Thompson, of Thompson & Elliott, wholesale grocers, Vancouver, has left for a business trip to Winnipeg and will return early in April.

H. S. Wickens has joined the sales staff of the H. P. Pennock & Company wholesale commission brokers, Winnipeg, and will be covering the territory from their Saskatoon branch.

H. M. Mann has bought out the business conduceted at 8607 Granville Street, Marpole, by A. Daintree. Mr. Daintree is opening a store at 1,043 28th East, South Vancouver.

The Grocers' Section, Vancouver, B. C., is laying plans for a big social to which all grocers will be invited, and no business will be talked. By such means a closer feeling of mutual sympathy will be engendered among the grocers of the city.

The following grocers have been appointed to the office of directors in the Grocery Section, Vancouver Branch Retail Merchants' Association:—George Carter, J. W. Brogan, of the City Cash Grocery, J. Merilees, W. Allison, J. W. Payne, O. B. Fennell, T. W. Vincent, A. Meston of Meston & Co., J. Patterson.

Birks Crawford & Co., 1101 Dominion Bldg., Vancouver, have changed their name to include one of their principals who has been actively associated with the business for some months. The new name is Birks, Crawford & Lindsay, Ltd. C. B. Lindsay & Co., of London and Liverpool, become in this way publicly associated with G. E. Crawford and G. Arnold Birks in this business.

Albert E. Dingle, 43 years old, manager of the Edmonton branch of the firm of Dingle & Stewart, pased away a few days ago after an illness extending over two years. Mr. Dingle had been a resident of Edmonton for seven years, following his acceptance of the managership of the Edmonton branch of the firm. Previous to that time he lived for many years in Winnipeg. Mr. Dingle was an official of the United Commercial Travelers. He is survived by his wife and seven children.

DEATH OF SASKATOON MGR. OF THE CODVILLE CO.

Kenneth D. Sinclair, manager of The Codville Co., Ltd., Saskatoon, died recently at the General Hospital, Winnipeg. The late Mr. Sinclair was 41 years of age and came to Canada in 1902 from Scotland, entering the employ of The Codville Co., Limited, shortly afterwards. He established the company's Saskatoon branch in 1908 holding the position of manager since that time. Of a quiet, industrious disposition and sterling character he was held in the highest esteem by a large circle of friends and was a prominent figure in the Western Wholesale grocery trade.

James Harkness is Re-elected President of Vancouver Grocers

Grocers' Section Elect Officers—F. W. Walford, Another Grocer at the Coast, Discusses Some Phases of the Sales Tax—T. F. McDowell Talks on Price Maintenance

VANCOUVER, April 10.—At the annual meeting of the Vancouver grocers' section of the Retail Merchants' Association held recently, the officers for the ensuing year were elected.

It is a great tribute to the excellent work done on behalf of the retail grocers by the last year's president, James Harkness, that the retail body returned him to office for the coming year by acclamation. Not only were there no other candidates presented for the office but several of the members spontaneously rose to their feet and the secretary had to take a hand to see that they waited their turn to express their satisfaction with the way the office had been filled during the past turbulent year of merchandising.

Hugh Morrow, of Morrow and Dean, Vancouver, was elected first vice-president, and despite his protestations that he had served his time in years gone by on the executive, A. A. Blain was induced to accept the office of second vice-president. Chas. O. Merritt, of Merritt and Beaton, was re-elected to the office of secretary, and Sam Pritchard was again elected to the office of treasurer.

Many matters of vital importance to the retail grocery trade were discussed at length. The matter of price maintenance was the subject of an able address by T. F. McDowell, a past president and active worker in the association's affairs.

In the president's remarks, a resume was given of the various points that the association has striven for, and the number that had been won.

One particularly interesting matter was brought to the attention of the meeting by F. W. Walford. It has to do with the sales tax, and according to Mr. Walford the retailers in Vancouver have, either through ignorance or intent, been out of pocket many hundreds of dollars in the past months.

"If I buy (I shall use fictitious names) Brown's best coffee from Brown the wholesaler who manufactures it, I must pay a sales tax of three per cent. If I buy it from Jones, the other wholesaler, I can get it at the same price, but only pay 1½ per cent. sales tax. Then when I buy Jones' Jelly Powders, from Jones the wholesaler who makes them, I pay 3 per cent., but if I buy Jones' Jelly Powders from Brown, I only pay half as much tax. As it stands now I am buying from each wholesaler, the goods that the other wholesaler makes. This is a real condition. It is a farce, I admit. These is a joker somewhere. Probably they are all interpreting the law as they see it. In my estimation, though, I am not in purchasing Jones' Jelly Powder from Jones buying from Jones the manufacturer, but Jones the jobber. When checking his goods from his factory to his wholesale warehouse he should charge the one and a half per cent. to his wholesale department, which should absorb it the same as it absorbs the tax on goods from every other manufacturer—not pass the whole tax along to the retailer. There are concerns—manufacturing concerns—in Vancouver who do their own jobbing and they only charge the one and a half on my invoices. I presume they absorb the manufacturing tax. This is a point that would bear investigation, at any rate. At present, the solution seems to be to buy each manufacturing jobber's goods from his competitor."

JAMES HARKNESS
Who has been re-elected President of the Grocers' Section of Vancouver R. M. A.

A great deal of discussion resulted and many views were given on this subject. It was stated at the meeting, that the wholesalers were having a special session the same day.

NEW INDUSTRY AT COAST WILL MAKE STARCH PRODUCTS

New Westminster, B. C.—Incorporation has been granted to the Pacific Starch Products Ltd., a new company capitalized at $100,000 in which a number of B. C. men are interested. The directors include H. V. Jansen, chemical engineer, formerly of the Dominon ;itn Products Ltd., Bayard Abrams, proprietor of the Royal City Laundry, and N. S. Rattray, of the People's Providers, grocers, New Westminster. H. J. Sanders, of Victoria, is president, and Mr. Jansen general manager. The company's head office is in Vancouver, and a New Westminster office has been opened in the Westminster Trust building. It is the intention of the company to enter into the business of manufacturing starch products from potatoes. Their plant will be located on the Fraser River.

This Merchant Says Rolling Store Not A Success In City

Montreal.—Another grocer has experimented and decided that "rolling stores" will not pay in the city. The idea has lost its glamor, at least in Montreal. A few months ago, Jack Wolman, who, with his brother, owns the Villeneuve Provision Store at 140 Villeneuve Street, Montreal, decided that he would buy a motor truck, fit it up as a grocery store and with it canvass the north end of the city, selling groceries to the women at their own homes. It was thought that the public would appreciate the service, but Mr. Wolman thinks different now. Wisely he tried sending out men on a commission basis to solicit orders from door to door before he fitted out the "rolling store."

"It won't work," said Mr. Wolman, to a Canadian Grocer representative after he had tried out his experiment. "Somehow these women like to take the trouble to go out shopping, unless at an odd time there is some small item they are out of at a critical moment. But these critical moments don't come often enough or at the opportune time to pay the up-keep alone of a motor truck such as we had planned. We sent out some of the unemployed men of our city on a commission basis to solicit orders. We gave them a list of articles with as low prices as we quote in our store, and gave them a five per cent. commission. Well, it didn't work, and that is all. I am thankful we found out in time.

"We are, however, going to have our motor truck fitted up with a body like a small store, just the same, and start it out in the country districts early in May. We intend to follow the Lake Shore Road and along the Back River and cover that residential district three times a week with groceries. We will have a regular schedule of time and calls, so that the women may know just when to expect us. This we will properly advertise in the press and then give out time tables by which our route will be covered. After carefully studying conditions, the cost and the opportunity, I feel confident that such a service will prove profitable. The people who move out of the city in the spring and stay in the country till the fall need a regular grocery service, and I hope to fill that need with my grocery store on wheels."

WEEKLY GROCERY MARKET REPORTS

Statements from Buying Centres.

MARKETS AT A GLANCE

A GREAT deal of irregularity has been featuring the refined sugar market for the past couple of weeks with prices being quoted considerably less than the official list price to $6.30 Montreal basis which is practically the same level at which sugar has been quoted by wholesalers to the retail trade.

The raw market during the past week has been towards higher prices with actual sales for Cubas at 2½c c. & f. New York for prompt and April shipments, totalling nearly 151,000 bags. There was also sales of two cargos to operators at 2 1-16c c. & f. which figures to 2.40c f.o.b. Cuba. The United Kingdom and Europe bought moderately at the advanced prices of from 12s 10½d to 13c 7½d c. i. f. U. K., the latter quotation figuring about 2.40c f. o. b. Cuba. The grinding of the Cuban crop is progressing. There are now 184 centrals grinding as against 194 last year and 188 in 1920. The 184 centrals produced during the week 203,157 tons making a total production of this season's crop approximately two million tons. The total amount of sugar on the inland of Cuba, comprising both old and new crop sugars, stands at 1,314,122 tons, an increase of nearly 50,000 tons from last week's figure.

Ontario beans continue firm at the moment with quotations strongly held at the higher levels, but there is a possibility for an easier turn as foreign beans have been offered at a lower price than Ontario and we understand shipments of these beans will arrive within the next two or three weeks. Rolled oats are inclined to be easier with quotations in certain quarters reduced.

Primary tea markets show no new developments other than a continuation of the strength and tendencies toward higher levels. In the spot tea market further evidence is noted for higher levels owing to the fact that prices are still below replacement costs. Importers also state that offerings are becoming fewer.

Evaporated apples have advanced sharply during the past few weeks, owing to export inquiry and it is now estimated that stocks are fairly well exhausted. Prunes continue active with the market in a strong position. Raisins show a weakness and as stocks at the Coast are large at this season, there are possibilities for reductions in prices.

New pack lobster is offered, but prices are comparatively high. Canned vegetables continue firm while fruits are moving satisfactorily and a close clean up is expected. Shelled nuts are moving in moderate volume, but the market is quiet.

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, April 13.—During the past week sugar has declined to $6.30. Molasses show some weakness with cutting and lower prices quoted on contracts for delivery this season. In canned goods, canned corn and tomatoes are the features, with the likelihood of an early advance in tomatoes. Canned fruits are easy. Spices are more active with stronger primary markets. Evaporated apples have been advanced another half cent and prunes are due to be scarce in the fall. The other lines are steady and unchanged. Cereals are firm but there is some local cutting in price. Package goods are unchanged. Coffee holds a strong position and is likely to go higher. The tea market continues to gain strength and local wholesalers are just waiting for some one to start the advance which promises to be of fair proportions. Package teas have not yet been changed. Montreal potatoes continue to drop in price and new potatoes are also easier. Radishes, lettuce and spinach are lower. Bananas are a little lower and Messina lemons are down. Strawberries are now coming in pints from Louisiana at 25 and 28 cents a pint box.

HIGHER PRICES ON TOMATOES

Montreal.

CANNED GOODS.—There has been no change in canned goods but canned vegetables hold a strong position with light stocks on hand. Tomatoes and corn are particularly strong and local wholesalers are expecting an advance in tomatoes. The holdings of independent canners are well cleaned up, and jobbers are looking for replenishment but as there remains practically only one source of supply, a higher price is asked. Canned fruits run easy and as some have old stocks to unload prices vary.

COFFEE IN STRONG POSITION

Montreal.

COFFEE.—The coffee market continues to hold its strong position. Local prices are unchanged, but in primary markets prices continue to advance point by point. Local dealers state that the only factor in preventing an advance at present is that the prices last Fall were sufficiently high to allow a margin for an advance in primary cost. This margin has now been wiped out and dealers are working close to first hand quotations. Demand for coffee is fair and steady.

EVAPORATED APPLES HIGHER

Montreal.

DRIED FRUITS.—The feature of the dried fruit market is another advance of ½ cent on evaporated apples. Local wholesale prices are yet unchanged, but at the evaporators the price has gone up 1½ cents inside of two weeks. A change in the wholesale price may be expected at any time. Currants are steady. The demand for glace fruits is only fair, the bigger movement being to the confectionery trade. The prune market is strong and authoritative reports state that, should the demand for prunes continue only as fair as it has been for the last two or three months, the holdings of the packers at the coast will be entirely cleaned up at least three months before the new crop is available. Under these conditions it is evident that prunes are to be scarce during September and October at least. The market is on the verge of another advance although speculators in New York are cutting prices slightly in order to unload what they are holding. Prices at the coast are not being advanced to take advantage in order that the new crop will not come on the market with a handicap next November.

LOWER PRICES FOR MOLASSES

Montreal.

MOLASSES.—Lower prices are expected on molasses for the first of May or as soon as the new shipments can come up the St. Lawrence. One wholesale firm is quoting a contract figure of the new season much lower than the present basis which itself runs easy. The reason given is that molasses must of necessity follow to some extent the trend of the sugar market. The price quoted locally on Barbadoes molasses is from 64 to 68 cents in puncheons and 70 cents for the city delivered. There are a number of different grades offered which to some extent accounts for the variety of prices quoted. There is no change in molasses or corn syrups.

NEW RICE WILL COST MORE

Montreal.

RICE.—One or two changes in local wholesale prices on rice are noticed which come as a result of recent advances made by millers. The advance amounts to ¼ to ½ cent per pound. But the change is not general. Primary markets maintain their strength and it looks as though higher prices locally may be expected on rice. One local wholesaler states that to replace local stocks would cost 75 cents a bag more.

REFINED SUGAR REDUCED AGAIN

Montreal

SUGAR.—On Friday last the local refined sugar market dropped to a basis of $6.30 per hundred wholesale which has brought the wholesale trade in line again with the refiners and list prices are maintained. On the other hand the raw market is stronger with the price standing at 2¼ to 2⅜ cents c.i.f., New York. The market has gained a point in the last day or so. The demand for sugar locally is only fair as retailers are only buying for immediate requirements.

TEA ON EVE OF ADVANCE

Montreal.

TEA.—The markets in tea continue to maintain their strength and gather more. Recent cables from London emphasize this strength. There has been no change in local markets during the last week, but some wholesalers and tea dealers who have been slow to follow up advances have adjusted their prices to cover present replacement costs. Package teas have not yet changed, but may come at a short notice. Local wholesalers are expecting an advance in their prices almost any day. From the condition of the tea market and the light available supplies it is evident that the present strength will be maintained.

STRAWBERRIES EASIER

Montreal.

FRUITS.—There are few changes in the fruit market. Lemons are a little easier but oranges are firm. Bananas are down 25 cents. Strawberries packed in pint boxes are now coming from Louisiana and are quoted at 25 and 28 cents a box, which is a little easier than previous prices. There is a good demand for this out-of-season fruit. Florida grapefruit, locally, is easy, temporarily.

ACTIVE VEGETABLE MARKET

Montreal.

VEGETABLES.—The vegetable market is easier in general with still lower prices on Montreal potatoes and a reduction on the new imported potatoes. Lettuce is in better supply with easier prices and radishes are down. Spanish onions have taken another jump upwards with only small available supplies. Cabbages are plentiful and spinach is quoted at $4.50 a barrel. Tomatoes are in big supply with a good demand and prices easy.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, April 12.—Refiners announce a reduction in the list price of sugar, bringing the price to practically the same basis as wholesalers have been quoting for the past couple of weeks. Stocks of evaporated apples are becoming exhausted with the result that the market is in a strong position with a likelihood for some further advances. Raisins are showing signs for weakness while currants continue firm with prices advanced a shade in some quarters. Importers and wholesalers are again talking of advancing prices on teas claiming that spot prices are still lower than replacement costs. In the primary tea markets there is little change other than a continuation of the strength which has been prevailing for some time. Rolled oats are lower. New pack canned lobster will likely be high. Canned vegetables are maintaining a strong tone while fruits have a firmer undertone with stocks likely to be fairly well cleaned up by the time new packs are available. The bean market looks easier under offerings at a lower price of foreign beans. Fresh fruits and vegetables show few changes.

BEANS LOOK EASIER

Toronto.

BEANS—The bean market appears to have taken an easier turn. At the moment Ontario stock is strongly held as supplies are fairly well cleaned up but owing to foreign beans offered on this market at a lower price than Ontario stock, the market can be considered as having a shade easier tone. Belgium and Roumanian beans are expected on this market in the course of two or three weeks at prices at least 50c per bushel less than present prices on Ontario.

NEW PACK LOBSTER HIGH

Toronto

CANNED GOODS—New pack lobster are offered on the market at comparatively high prices. The f. o. b. price on one brand to the wholesale trade is $4.25 for halves which will mean practically $5 to the retail trade. Vegetables show no change but continue with strong tendencies. Fruits are also becoming firmer and it is the general opinion that most stocks will be fairly well cleaned up by the time new packs are available. Silver Stand, Singapore sliced pineapple, No. 1½ tins are offered at $2.75 per doz. Delmonte sliced pineapple, No. 2s, is quoted at $3.60 per doz. Lynn Valley pitted and peeled pie peaches No. 10 tins are quoted at 7.40 per doz. Pumpkin is higher, Riverside brand being offered at $1.80 per doz. for No. 2½ tins. Clark's beans in Chili sauce are quoted higher at $1.65 for 1½s, and $1.75 for 2s. Clark's corn beef, No. 1s, is offered at a lower price of $2.95 per doz.

ROLLED OATS LOWER

Toronto.

CEREALS—As intimated under this heading in last week's issue, rolled oats are quoted lower. Manufacturers still maintain that rolled oats cannot be milled at the present prices, but notwithstanding this, prices are reduced about 20c per 98 lb. bag. Wholesalers quotations now range from $2.95 to $3.10 per bag. Other cereals are fairly steady at unchanged quotations.

RAISINS SHOW WEAKNESS

Toronto.

DRIED FRUITS—The raisin situation has developed a weakness and for sometime past primary markets have been quiet with prices showing much irregularity. It is now considered that stocks at the Coast are larger than they should be and with production in California this coming season likely to be large, there are indications that prices will need to be lower if the stock is to be moved off. Then again consumption has not been large this season, and it is claimed the reason for this is that prices are higher than the public are willing to pay. Evaporated apples have advanced sharply during the past couple of weeks and stocks are now considered almost exhausted. Another strengthening factor in evaporated apples, is that there has been and is still considerable foreign inquiry. Currants are firm with quotations in some quarters advanced ½c per lb. Prunes continue strong under an active demand.

STRONG TEA MARKETS

Toronto.

TEAS—There are practically no new developments in the tea market other than a continuation of the strength that has prevailed for sometime past. Importers are talking of some further advances and claim there is less tea now being offered. Spot prices are still out of line with replacement costs and the trade can naturally look for prices to reach higher levels.

MANITOBA MARKETS

WINNIPEG, April 12.—Wholesalers and retailers report business having a brighter feeling. Coffee on the primary markets has shown slight advances. Prices on salmon will be higher this year than last year. The dried fruit market, although quiet, is maintaining a firm tone. Light breakfast cereals are showing an improvement in the demand with the approach of warmer weather. There is a good sale of medium priced jams. Sugar continues to be sold at less than refiners' list price. Teas are showing a firmer tone and indications point to higher prices on bulk teas locally. There is a better demand for all lines of fruit and some lines have shown advances. Green vegetables are arriving freely.

COFFEE ADVANCING

Winnipeg.

COFFEE.—Although the coffee market is quiet the tone is firm and prices advanced an eighth to a quarter of a cent. It is estimated that the Santos crop for the coming year will be about seven million bags. On the local market the demand is fairly active but quotations show no change.

CANNED SALMON HIGHER

Winnipeg.

CANNED GOODS.—Some packers are offering new packed salmon at a fixed price guaranteed against decline. Prices on new packed sockeye are based on what European buyers are paying for same and are quoted at prices above last year's. Pink salmon will be from 50c. to $1 per case higher than the trade paid for same last year. Opening prices on the new packed lobsters are expected shortly and will be higher. Steadily growing strength prevails in the market for canned tomatoes and further advances have been made. Stocks show evidence of being well cleaned up. There is no change in the canned fruit situation and the demand continues light.

Favored Everywhere But in Canada

Can the Dominion Afford to Allow Oleomargarine to Pass From the Table?—"If it is a Legitimate Article of Commerce, Why Should We Interfere With it at All?" Asks Hon. W. S. Fielding, Minister of Finance

"I AM FOR moderation in everything and prohibition in nothing." The words are ascribed to the Hon. W. Mackenzie King when recently addressing a delegation at Ottawa. They might properly be taken as a statement of the fair claim of those who want oleomargarine and its sale in Canada permitted.

An instructive booklet has been issued by the Canadian Manufacturers and Importers of Oleomargarine entitled, "Why Ban a Good Food." In plain, easily understood language it sets out the food value of the product and the main reasons why it is favored in every country but Canada. In fact it is hard to see why the Dominion stands out in not freely and permanently permitting the sale of oleomargarine against the experience and legislative enactments of Great Britain, United States, France, Italy, Holland, Belgium, Germany, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Austria, Finland, Czecho Slovakia, Australia, Switzerland. Newfoundland, New Zealand and Poland.

Some Convincing Extracts

Grocers and provision men are a long way past the necessity for themselves being persuaded about the true value of oleomargarine. But they are usually busy men who have little time for detailed study of one aspect of their trade and the expression in words of the faith that is in them is not always a gift of busy men. Therefore it will help to crystallize the argument if a few extracts are made from the booklet. The points that follow are chiefly taken from this source:—

Can the Dominion afford to allow oleomargarine to disappear from the table? The chief argument against it by the dairy interests is in reality the best reason for its continuance. If it has cheapened the cost of living to the vast majority of working families in the cities and towns—and fifty per cent. of the Dominion population to-day is urban—is it not the best possible proof that oleomargarine is a benefit?

As a matter of fact it has not replaced butter. It has supplemented it. What oleomargarine actually has done is to supply the ordinary table and kitchen with a food, highly valuable for its fat content, which for many would have to be obtained in some cruder form if oleomargarine were not obtainable.

Has Performed a Tremendous Service

Oleomargarine came into existence because of a shortage of palatable edible fats and it has thrived because the production of these has never kept pace with the growth of population. Since, because of world scarcity, the supply of palatable fats, is not otherwise sufficient to meet the demand, oleomargarine has performed a service. Over a million pounds per month are now being consumed in Canada.

Sell Under Its Own Name

Every reputable grocer will agree that oleomargarine, (or margarine as it is called in England) should sell under its own name and on its merits. It should not be allowed to trade on the name of any other product. If sold under any other name, the same kind of fraud is committed as if cotton were sold as wool. Frauds of this kind are sometimes perpetrated in connection with tea and other products, yet no one would suggest that the production of cotton be prohibited in order to protect wool.

Some Well Founded Opinions

Dr. Harry E. Barnard, Dairy and Food Commissioner of the State of Indiana, in "Effect of Food Control on the Food Supply," says: "As I look back over nearly 20 years of active control work, I find but few laws that have checked the development of food industries or tended to increase food prices. Among these few, one law in particular stands out as a striking example of vicious legislation, deliberately enacted and enforced against one legitimate industry for the purpose of stimulating another. That law is the oleomargarine law."

Professor W. O. Atwater, Director of the United States Government Agriculture Experiment Station at Washington, says:—"Oleomargarine contains essentially the same ingredients as natural butter from cow's milk. It is perfectly wholesome and healthy and has a high nutritive value."

Dr. H. W. Wiley, the noted pure food authority of the United States Government, in 1900 testified before the Agricultural Committee:—"In all my extensive analysis of butterine or oleomargarine, nothing objectionable or deleterious to health has ever been found, and oleomargarine, as made to-day, is pure, palatable and more nutritious than butter."

What Hon. W. S. Fielding Says

The booklet gives the following extract from a speech in parliament by the Hon. W. S. Fielding, now Minister of Finance in the King Government, when the Oleomargarine Act was under discussion:—

"If it is a legitimate article of commerce, why should we interfere with it at all. The question is: Is this a legitimate article of commerce? The whole world outside of Canada answers that question: Yes, it is a legitimate article of commerce. Every country in the world except Canada recognizes that it is a legitimate article of commerce. One is reminded of the old story of the juryman who complained that he had never seen such stupid men in his life as the other eleven. The opponents of oleomargarine are in just that position. The whole world except Canada says: Oleomargarine is all right, let us buy it, and sell it if we can. But we are going to decide in Canada, against the judgment of the whole world, that it is not a legitimate article of trade, and it seems to me that that is not a position that can be maintained at all. We are

Produce, Provision and Fish Markets

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, April 12.—The feature of the produce market is the easier market for hogs with lower prices on fresh pork. The demand has been light during Lent and did not show much improvement for Easter. The demand for smoked meats has been good and prices are firm. Cooked meats are unchanged. Butter is lower in price with the first of the new make on the market. The production of eggs shows an increase but the demand is also heavier and dealers are buying for storage purposes. Lard is down half a cent a pound, on account of the easier prices on hogs. Since the ice has broken up in the St. Lawrence and in Lake Champlain, there is a larger offering of fresh lake fish with prices easy. Maple syrup has fallen again in price and a record production for the year is recorded with the close of the run.

BUTTER PRICES LOWER

Montreal.

BUTTER—The butter market weakened during the week after the activity of the previous five or six days. Prices show a decline of 1c and creamery prints are now quoted at 41c. Some of the new make of creamery butter is offered at 42c per lb. but the supply is limited. The prospect of this coming on the market has a weakening tendency, but there may be a reaction early next week. In the meantime there is a fair demand for creamery butter with ample supplies of the old make on hand.

CHEESE UNCHANGED

Montreal.

CHEESE—There has been a little more activity in the cheese market during the past week which is attributed to a better demand from English buyers and for export to the U. S. The prospect for this year's make is for an increase over the production of last year. Local wholesale prices are unchanged, but have a firm tone. Mild cheese is quoted at 19c per lb. and old at 24c.

EGG PRICES STEADY

Montreal

EGGS—There is no important change in the condition of the egg market. Supplies have been heavy owing to the steady increase in production and improved conditions on the country roads have brought larger offerings to the market. The consumption continues large and dealers have commenced storage operations which has brought a little stronger tone to the market. Prices rule steady with a shade on imported American eggs. The price now quoted is 32c per doz. for new laid Canadian and 31c for American eggs.

SMOKED MEATS FIRM

Montreal

SMOKED MEATS—There is no change in prices on smoked meats, but a stronger tone is evidenced in view of the Easter demand. During this week prices have been firming up with a bigger demand from retailers to meet increased requirements. During Lent, stocks have been allowed to run low and buying has received a sudden impetus which has strengthened prices all round. A stronger market with likely an advance may be expected during the early part of next week as a result of the increased demand.

MAPLE SYRUP LOWER

Montreal.

MAPLE SYRUP—The production of maple syrup in Quebec has been unusually large this season. Prices have fallen off and inside of three days last week quotations dropped from $2.00 a gal. to $1.50. Branded and graded lines of maple syrup however, have held firm at the price of $2.00 a gal. The easy market has created a bigger demand however, and producers claim that the whole of the supply will be taken up inside of a few months. One producer reported to Canadian Grocer last week that practically the whole of their available supply is now on order and will be shipped inside of the next few weeks. Maple sugar prices vary from 20c to 30c per lb. according to quality.

DROP IN LARD

Montreal.

LARD—The feature of the lard market has been a decline of ½c during last week. Prices this week have ruled easy with in some cases another decline of ½c The trade for lard has been fair and easier prices have stimulated business to some extent. The present weakness of the hog market indicates an easier future for lard.

LOWER PRICES ON HOGS

Montreal.

FRESH MEATS—Hog prices have dropped during the past week until a basis of $13 for light weights, weighed off cars, and $13.50 for selected bacon hogs. The demand for fresh pork is light and prices run easy. An improved demand for smoked meats is the only firm item in the hog market and prices may be expected to be a little easier next week. rimmed loins of fresh pork are down another cent to 28c and 29c per lb. The beef market shows no change, but holds steady. The demand is only fair despite the Easter season. Offerings are not large, but ample to meet requirements.

Montreal.

FISH—The breaking up of the ice on the St. Lawrence has given fishermen a chance to commence operations in Lake Champlain and at Chateauguay and good supplies of fresh perch and pike are now on the market. Fresh halibut is also in good supply and salmon and sturgeon are expected this week. The oyster season is approaching its end and sales at present are small.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, April 12.—The produce and provision markets during the week show little change and generally are quiet. Butter is firm at the moment but a slightly easier undertone prevails which can also be said in regards to the egg market. Live hog values strengthened under lighter receipts while the cattle market weakened under heavier offerings. Spring lambs are in light supply and generally of a poor character. Smoked meats, lard, shortening and cooked meats are unchanged and little of interest is noted. The fish markets are fairly brisk in anticipation for the Good Friday trade.

BUTTER PRICES FIRM

Toronto.

BUTTER—Although butter prices continue firm at one to two cents higher than a week ago, there is nevertheless a slightly easier undertone. Many dealers have the opinion that prices have about reached the peak and are therefore not overly anxious to stock heavily. American fresh made butter is arriving at slightly lower prices than Ontario fresh made which is another factor to be considered. Quotations for No. 1 creamery stands at 44c to 45c per lb., with under grades around 43c per lb.

EGGS LOOK EASIER

Toronto

EGGS—At the moment the market rules firm but there appears to be a shade easier undertone. The demand is heavy and is practically taking care of the production. It is felt however, that when the Easter rush is over and production becomes larger that a determined effort will be made by buyers to bring prices down. Quotations at present to the retail trade are unchanged at 31c to 32c per doz.

HOG VALUES HIGHER

Toronto.

FRESH MEATS—Lighter receipts of hogs during the week prevented buyers from putting into effect the lower prices which they were endeavoring to do as we went to press a week ago. Buying from outside sources was also keen, which, coupled with the lighter receipts served to advance prices on live hogs 75c per cwt., making the fed and watered basis $13.75. The cattle market was weak under heavy receipts. There was a scarcity of real good calves but there was a considerable quantity of medium grades offered. Spring lambs are arriving slowly and the majority of the offerings were of poor quality.

it has not been charged to merchandise costs, here is a leak of almost 4¼ per cent, which amounts to $3,114.32, and which would show net profits of over 4 per cent. on sales if that item could be lifted out of expense and put where it belongs. Freight never should have anything to do with expenses. It is not an expense. It is an element in the direct cost of merchandise.

Too Much Credit

I am such a believer in the credit business that maybe I may seem inconsistent when I say that this man seems to do too great a proportion of his business on credit. Evidently over two-thirds is credit. Maybe there is a good reason for this.

The notes due the bank and those due him so nearly balance that I think that paper is customers' notes discounted. So lifting that item out of the accounts, we have debts of 8,986.96 against $10,575.27 of stock, showing over 85 per cent. current indebtedness against current stock. It seems to me that, no matter how this may be figured, it is not good business to own so little equity in your stock. Better clean up and own what you have. That is old fashioned, but sound.

This gentleman says he has spent $4,000 privately which does not appear in the statement. I cannot see that it has been earned. If I have all the figures, I can see that he has less tangible assets than a year ago and understand his anxiety to find the leak.

Finally, I think expenses are right, or not excessive, for his locality and class of business. Wages of six per cent. all told are certainly 'way down and other items do not seem too big. Margins probably could be improved. It all hinges on that item of freight. If that can be eliminated from expenses and put where it belongs through the year, all will probably be well.

told now that oleomargarine has been adulterated. That argument is absolutely fatuous. The sole question is this: Is it a fair article for general trade? That is all. I cannot believe that there is any danger to the dairy industry from the sale of oleomargarine. If you have not sufficient regulations to ensure that the article is properly stamped, and advertised to the public as oleomargarine, then make your regulations stronger.

"There are several factories in Canada, although I have not the pleasure of knowing any one connected with any of these factories and cannot say how they are individually affected; but if men have been induced to put money into factories for the manufacture of oleomargarine and are kept in suspense from year to year, it is certainly not fair to them. It would be far better to prohibit the manufacture and sale of this article at once, and have done with the question."

Instant Service Means Time and Labor Saved

—And you can have that kind of service when you install a Bowser Piston-Type Measuring Oil Pump. It is always primed and ready for use. No funnels or measuring cans are needed. Built to deliver one quart, or fraction thereof, positive mechanical stops assure accurate measurement.

Bowser not only means a saving of time and labor, but the air-tight, all-metal construction eliminates loss of oil. This reduces your cost of handling oil. The same features that eliminate oil losses, also assure you of clean oil. This is an important item, as the difference between clean and dirty oil may mean several years in the life of your machinery.

There are more than a million Bowsers in use and Bowser Equipment has never started or contributed to a fire.

HIAWATHA

The name "Hiawatha" on a tin of apples means it contains only sound, selected fruit from the great orchards of Nova Scotia. We take special care in packing. This is indicated by the favor Hiawatha Brand gallon apples have met with in the critical Old Country market.

Pure Cider Vinegar

The same careful attention is given the manufacture of our high standard Pure Cider Vinegar. No fruit that has a blemish is used—only clean, sound apples are permitted to go through the cider mill. These two products will be found good money-makers by the Canadian grocery trade.

NEW PACK LOBSTER LIKELY TO BE HIGH

The new pack of lobsters is showing an indication for fairly high prices. This is attributed to the difficulty fishermen are experiencing in getting sufficient catch. Generally the Spring pack does not reach this market until well into the summer months but owing to the fact that the last season's pack has been practically cleaned up, some packers have sent out some small shipments. The price at which these are offered is comparatively high and unless the catch is considerably increased the price this comnig season will be practically on the same high level as opening prices which run from $4.25 to $5.00 per doz. for halves.

Money-Saving Information

"The most useful information contained in any paper I get"—so a Western banker writes in to-day's mail, renewing his subscription for FINANCIAL POST.

"Very often," his letter goes on to say, "I am called on to suggest investments for small amounts, sometimes as low as a few hundreds, and I find your Investors' Inquiry Service a reliable partner to consult. If every investor knew there was such service at his call it would surely lessen the losses of many of these people."

The Investors' Inquiry Service fills just that need. Unless you are perfectly sure of your investments write us before you buy.

It costs FINANCIAL POST subscribers nothing to be sure before placing hard-earned savings in stocks that may never have a chance of paying dividends. Trained service men will give you the benefit of keen analysis based on the facts behind the securities you are considering. This is one of many features enjoyed by our readers.

520 Tins Canned Peaches Sold in 3 Days—C. H. Burtt, retail grocer, Fredericton, N.B., decided to push sales of a certain brand of Canned Peaches. He used window and interior displays, advertised this line in his local paper and had the sales staff talk peaches.

85 Cases Pickles Sold by Retailer's Enterprise—Hood & Benallick, grocers, Guelph, Ont., bought 100 cases branded pickles last fall and less than 15 remain. Sales made by personal suggestions, window and inside displays.

600 Tins Canned Soup in 4 Days—George O. Werrett, Simcoe, Ont., put on a soup demonstration and everybody was invited to try the line. After demonstration was over sales staff followed up work done. Have secured splendid repeat business.

$5,000 in Quality Confectionery—E. R. Robertson, St. John, N.B., sold this amount last year. Silent salesmen at front of store, fresh stocks, attractive arrangement and personal suggestion chief methods used.

15 Cases Canned Pineapple Sold Through New Idea—Daniel MacDonnell, Kamloops, B.C., ran across recipe showing use of pineapple in citron preserve. Found it produced good results and recommended it to customers. Sold all the pineapple in stock.

Canada's aggressive retail grocers and their clerks do not simply supply "demands" or "requests" of customers. The above are a few of the thousands of cases we have found among the good dealers, that show how they are constantly creating demand. The 36th Annual Spring and Summer Issue of Canadian Grocer, May 5, will be brimful of similar experiences gathered through personal interviews by our own representatives from all parts of Canada. This issue long ago became a definite part of the Spring and Summer plans of hundreds of subscribers.

Can a merchant actually sell goods as shown above if he doesn't know them well? Couldn't an aggressive dealer sell more of your goods if he knew them better and their quality, uses and merits were brought before him constantly?

CANADIAN GROCER is the recognized all-Canadian foodstuff authority. Subscribers pay $4 per year for it and do approximately $120,000,000 turnover every twelve months. It is the one medium that must be on the list of every well-rounded out advertising campaign. How else can you reach clerks in the important grocery stores throughout Canada?

Don't miss the Annual Spring and Summer Number. Let us quote you now on insert space, preferred positions, two-page spreads.

The Tobacco with a heart

Prepare for the Rush

THE approach of the fresh fruit season is the signal of the coming rush for Certo. Educate your customers NOW—be prepared.

Your work is simply to get Certo tried once on one batch of fruit. That is all we ask—and it's enough. One trial of Certo means a convert every time—Certo never fails.

What woman is going to continue the old fashioned, risky, hard working methods when

CERTO

REGISTERED TRADE MARK

—Reduces boiling of jam and jelly to one minute.

—Retains in jam and jelly the full original color and flavor of the fruit.

—Insures proper texture—no failures.

—Makes 50% more jam or jelly from the same amount of fruit.

Be prepared to introduce Certo to as many of your customers as possible, and as soon as possible.

Certo sales will then take care of themselves. One trial is plenty!

Start now—talk Certo to your customers; be prepared for the first rush—see that you are plentifully stocked. You can't go wrong.

Certo is a year around seller—it makes perfect jam or jelly from fresh fruits, dried fruits, bottled juices, etc.

Pure Country Milk

With the Cream Left In

You don't have to sell it—just let customers know that you have it . . . . . .

Most of your customers know Borden's St. Charles—the rich creamy milk that improves the flavor of cooking, of cereals, of fruits and of many table dishes; and Borden's intensive national advertising is constantly telling them that it also cuts the cost of cooking. Frequent St. Charles displays on your counter and in your windows will key up your store with Borden publicity and enable you to cash in on the nation wide popularity and national advertising of this fast seller.

Orders are crowding in. Stock up!

Victory Canned Products are now on customers' tables. Dealers who are pushing Victory products, are receiving handsome orders from housewives who want to "Keep a row of Victory meals on the shelf."

The way that orders are crowding in from dealers is significant of a big selling line far beyond expectations.

Of course, there is a reason.

One meal of Victory convinces the most exacting palate. Then there is the demand for more.

Remember, Victory Canned Meats and Victory Pork and Beans are government inspected at every stage of preparation. Choice meats only are used, and the finest quality of pork and beans. They have the quality that holds trade. Have you stocked up yet? We advise you—get your orders in promptly to your jobber.

Money-Saving Information

"The most useful information contained in any paper I get"—so a Western banker writes in to-day's mail, renewing his subscription for FINANCIAL POST.

"Very often," his letter goes on to say, "I am called on to suggest investments for small amounts, sometimes as low as a few hundreds, and I find your Investors' Inquiry Service a reliable partner to consult. If every investor knew there was such service at his call it would surely lessen the losses of many of these people."

The Investors' Inquiry Service fills just that need. Unless you are perfectly sure of your investments write us before you buy.

It costs FINANCIAL POST subscribers nothing to be sure before placing hard-earned savings in stocks that may never have a chance of paying dividends. Will There be a General Turnover Tax?

Retail Merchants Throughout Canada Have Made Vigorous Opposition to Any Such Plan on the Part of the Government, but Pressure From Certain Interests, it is Said, is Being Urged to Bring About Such a Tax—Some Retailers' Opinions.

THE BUDGET speech of the Finance Minister the Hon. W. S. Fielding will be brought down in in the House shortly, but of course the exact date is mere conjecture. However the announcement that the Finance Minister will not be able to receive any deputations or make any appointments in connection with the tariff after Saturday of this week is taken in some quarters to indicate that the tariff announcement is not far off.

What the government's plans are in the way of new taxation schemes is not known, but the idea of a general turnover tax, that would include retailers has met with general opposition on the part of retail merchants from one end of the country to the other. It is stated that pressure from certain branches of business is urging such a tax, but through a vigorous campaign on the part of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, the mind of the retailer in regard to such a tax has been pretty well impressed on the government and the Finance Minister in particular.

Wholesalers also Oppose

Armand Chaput, president of the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association, and A. C. Pyke, secretary of the same organization, conferred with Finance Minister Fielding this week in regard to the Budget. However the Wholesale grocers have opposed any such proposal as that of a general turnover tax. This association prefers that the Sales Tax remain as at present, or else that it be changed to a tax affixed to the manufacturer's price alone, and collected only at the source.

The question of securing the best and the most economic method of the application of a sales tax has received very careful thought and attention by the members of the Dominion Executive Council and the Dominion Board of The Retail Merchants' Association of Canada and, as a result of investigation and enquiry, a resolution was unanimously adopted throughout Canada and presented to the Dominion Government.

Recommending that the Sales Tax be collected at the source of supply and in this way the tax would be more economically collected and it would be absorbed in the same manner as all systems of taxation are absorbed, and that the words, "manufacturer" and "wholesaler" be properly defined in the Act so as not to include retail merchants.

To place a tax of one or two per cent. on the sales of all classes of retail merchants, irrespective of the amount of profit they make, it is urged, is absolutely unfair to the retail merchant who is compelled to make a large turnover in order to secure a small profit. To differentiate between the rate of percentage to be applied to each line of retail trade would cause great confusion and its application would be very injurious to general store merchants who carry nearly all classes of merchandise, which bear varying percentage of profit. This is one point that is entirely overlooked by those who advocate a tax on the turnover or sales of all retail merchants.

Loses $200 in Year

"We are certainly opposed to any turnover tax on retailers," remarked L. E. Mills of L. E. Mills and Son, Shannonville, Ont. "It would simply mean failures in business," he continued. "I think as far as the present sales tax is concerned, the country merchant largely bears it, as he is not passing it on to the consumer. As far we ourselves are concerned, we have never added it to the cost of our goods. Last year we paid out over $200 in this way. If an extra tax has to be levied it should be done on the manufactured article and added to the cost of production."

"If such legislation is enacted," stated D. Couper, grocer at Kingston, "I would like to know how a retail grocer could stay in business. The grocers are loaded with expenses now, and this last winter, owing to unemployment, they have had to carry large amounts on their books. Let the sales tax be collected at the source. I think that is the only way."

Liebeck and Heinmiller, general merchants at Chesley, Ont., are opposed to any such tax, declaring the only place to collect such a tax is at the source.

Bernard Leacy and Co., Ltd., Pembroke, Ont. grocers and general merchants, declare that a turnover tax would be very unfair to the retail trade, inasmuch as gross turnover in many instances is large whereas profits are very small. "For instance," James Kelly of this firm stated, "we pay 35c per lb. to our customers in trade for dairy butter and retail it including delivery for 35c. As we treat the purchase as a cash transaction, and the goods sold as cash sales in both cases we would have to pay twice on practically the one turnover."

Israel Brubacher, grocer at Elmira, Ont. in opposing a tax on turnover states that he specializes in eggs, buying from 75 to 100 cases a week from the farmers. He points out that these eggs are handled at a very small margin. Thus any tax on turnover would be very unfair, as in this instance the amount of the turnover runs up fairly large. The percentage paid in cash for eggs is approximately 90 per cent, so there is very little chance of a profit on goods in exchange.

The above expressions of opinions are but a few of hundreds that have been made by grocers and retailers generally throughout the country against any proposal of a turnover tax.

Would Not Affect Peddlers

Retail merchants in Winnipeg and throughout Manitoba, recently made official opposition to this suggested tax.

It is claimed by retail merchants in the West that there is no reason why they should be singled out for the paying of a turnover tax. If the Dominion government intends to adopt a turnover sales tax, it is recommended that it should be collected at the source. Another point emphasized by merchants is that a tax of this kind will not affect the thousands of peddlers and agents who travel from place to place selling goods.

Act Prohibiting the Fixing of Resale Prices Will Not Be Put Through This Session

Will be Referred to a Special Committee That Will Meet at the Close of the Present Session of the Ontario Legislature to Consider the Act

THE ACT known as the Act for the better prevention of certain commercial agreements, that was introduced a few days ago by the Hon. W. E. Raney, Attorney General for Ontario, and which sought to prevent the fixing of the resale price by manufacturers and wholesalers, will not be put through at the present session of the Ontario Legislature. The Attorney General has intimated that this Act will be referred to a special committee who will deal with it. The committee will meet after the present session is concluded when it will hear deputations, and all persons who are interested in the proposed legislation.

R. M. A. Will Fight Measure

The Dominion Board, Retail Merchants' Association of Canada is preparing to fight this anti-combine bill. Discussing the matter with Canadian Grocer, E. M. Trowern, secretary of the board said: "When Attorney General Raney announced that he had introduced legislation to prevent the manufacturers from placing retail prices on their goods to the wholesale and retal trade, we wired the provincial office in Toronto to arrange an appointment with Mr. Raney, when delegates from all parts of Ontario, as well as the officers of the Dominion Board will be present to point out the great injustice a measure of that sort would be to commerce. The retail merchants of this country are strongly opposed to combines which are for the purpose of injuring the public, and if any such exist they should be put out of business immediately. But to put a rule around the neck of every little retail merchant, manufacturer and wholesaler in Ontario, simply because some person not acquainted with commerce may think a combine exists, is both unjust and foolish.

"If the proposed measure is of the character contemplated, it will be opposed with all the force the retail merchants of Ontario and the Dominion Board can bring to bear on it."

Wholesalers Will Oppose

As was stated in last week's Canadian Grocer, the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association will also take steps to oppose the passing of a Bill of this kind. A. C. Pyke, secretary of the association, discussing the decision of the government to postpone the second reading of the Act, and the appointment of a special committee to consider the legislation, stated the association will no doubt appoint a committee to lay before the parliamentary committee the position of the wholesale grocers in regard to the Act. "It will not now be put through this session," Mr. Pyke added, "and we will be ready when our opportunity comes to go before the committee and oppose it."

A Good Thing For the Trade

In connection with the interview with W. F. Morley in last week's issue in regard to the proposed legislation against manufacturers fixing the resale price on goods, Mr. Morley points out that he does not say that a manufacturer shall not have the right to do whatever he pleases, but he thought that if legislation were put through as proposed by the Attorney General of Ontario, it would be a good thing for the trade in Canada.

Mr. Morley also referred to the so-called "Gentlemen's Agreements" existing among the trade, but he thought that the majority of these were not worth the paper they were written on. "We have had 'Gentlemen's Agreements' in the past," he said, "but from now on I hope they may be lived up to." He thought that anyone who buys an article should be in a position to do as he liked with it insofar as resale price is concerned.

George G. Jacobs, jam manufacturer at Oakville, Ont., has taken out a permit to build a new jam factory on Randall Street. The amount of the permit is $5,000.

THE LITTLE RED ROOSTER

Said the little red rooster
"Gosh all hemlock! Things are tough.
Seems that worms are getting scarcer and I cannot find enough. What's become of all those fat ones is a mystery to me;
there were thousands thru that rainy spell—but now where can they be?" The old oo black hen who heard him didn't ooooo
grumble or complain, she had gone ooooooo through lots of dry spells, she had lived oooooooo through floods of rain. She flew upon the grindstone and gave her claws a whet, as she said "I've never seen the time there weren't worms to get. She picked a new and undug spot; the earth was hard and firm. The little rooster jeered: "New ground; That's no place for a worm." The old black hen just spread her feet, she dug both fast and free. I must go to the worms," she said, "the worms won't come to me." The rooster vainly spent his day, through habit by the way, where fat round worms had passed in squads, back in the rainy days. When night-fall found him supperless, he growled in accents rough: "I'm hungry as a fowl can be, conditions sure are tough." He turned then to the old black hen and said "it's worse for you, for you're not only hungry but you must be tired too. I rested while I watched for worms, so I feel fairly perk; but how are you without worms too, and after all that work." The old black hen hopped to her perch and drooped her eyes in sleep, and murmured in a drowsy tone: "Young man, hear this and weep.
oooo
oooo
oooo
"I'm full of worms and happy too, for I've dined both long and well,
The worms are there as always—but I had to dig like....."

Oh, here and there red roosters are still holding sales positions,
They cannot do much business now, because of poor conditions,
But soon as things get right again, they'll sell a hundred firms;
Meanwhile the old black hens are agobbling up the worms.

Kellogg Decision Will Be Appealed

Justice Middleton's Opinion Favors Battle Creek Toasted Corn Flake Co., of London, Ont.—Litigation Started First in 1914—Statement From Defendants That Trade Will Be Protected.

JUDGMENT has at last been handed down in the famous Kellogg corn-flake case between the Battle Creek Toasted Corn Flake Co. of London, Ont., as plaintiffs and the W. K. Kellogg Cereal Co. of Battle Creek and Toronto, as defendants. Justice Middleton has given his decision in favor of the plaintiffs, restraining the defendants from manufacturing and selling in Ontario, cereal products in cartons similar in form, lettering and coloring to the cartons of the plantiff company, the injunction to take effect on May 15.

The London company asked for $100,000 in each of the two cases. Justice Middleton directs that the damages be ascertained by reference before the master.

The decission will be appealed by the defendants.

Remarks of The Judge

In giving his decision the judge gave a resume of the two cases and presented his opinion in part as follows:—

BATTLE CREEK TOASTED CORN FLAKE COMPANY, LIMITED
v.
KELLOGG TOASTED CORN FLAKE COMPANY, W. K. KELLOGG AND THE W. K. KELLOGG CEREAL COMPANY and
v.
THE W. K. KELLOGG CEREAL COMPANY AND KELLOGG CORN FLAKE COMPANY

Sir George Gibbons, K.C., G. S. Gibbons, Tillie, K. C., and H. S. White, K. C., for the plaintiffs.

Hellmuth, K. C., and T. G. Meredith, K. C., for the defendants.

The writ in the first of these actions was issued on the 25th of June, 1914: the writ in the second action on June 30th, 1919. The first action came to trial at London on June 18, 19 and 20, 1917, when the hearing was adjourned to be resumed at an early date if a settlement was not arrived at. Apparently nothing was done to end the litigation, and further things came to pass which precipitated the bringing of the second action in 1919.

It was ordered that the actions should be tried together, and the trial was resumed at Toronto on May 25, 26, 27 and 28, 1920, when a further judgment was made in the hope and expectation that a settlement would result, but this not having being accomplished, the trial was proceeded with January 4 and 5, 1921, and again on the 18th of March, 1921, when the evidence was closed and argument proceeded on this and the following day, both counsel desiring to supplement the oral argument by written argument.

Originated by Dr. Kellogg

The case is undoubtedly one of importance to the parties, and involving matters of difficulty, but the impression that the evidence made upon me compels me to think that some of the matters elaborately discussed, do not really arise.

J. L. Kellogg of the W. K. Kellogg Cereal Co. of Battle Creek, was in Toronto this week, and when spoken to in regard to contemplated action on the judgment that has been handed down in the Kellog case, refused to discuss the matter but intimated that an appeal will be entered against the judgment and stated that the trade will be protected.

John Harvey Kellogg, a medical man of high repute, established the well-known Battle Creek Sanitarium, mainly for the purpose of rendering aid to dyspeptics. He invented and used certain foods in the course of the treatment of the inmates of this sanitarium, and these foods became widely known and much in demand by dyspeptics throughout the United States.

Dr. Kellogg realised that money might be made of the marketing of these foods, but thought it infra dig. to himself take charge of this mercantile business. His brother, W. K. Kellogg was interested with him in his general business projects, and it was arranged that the commercial end of the undertaking should be carried on by the brother, so that professional discipline might not reach the doctor, but the profits of the entire undertaking were distributed 75% to the doctor, and 25% to the visible incarnation of what was really the doctor's business.

$75,000 For Canadian Rights

The situation of Canada as a possible field for exploitation had next to be considered. It was proposed that Mr. Robinson and Dr. Rhoome, who had some knowledge of the Battle Creek business, should organize a scheme for the handling of this project in Canada. In all this, Will K. Kellogg was an active and moving party. The result was a proposition to Dr. Rhoome, bearing date November 24th, 1906, sent by W. K. Kellogg followed by a letter from him on the following day. In consideration of $75,000 Dr. Rhoome and his associates were to have the right to manufacture and sell Sanitas Toasted Corn Flakes and any cereal food that they (i.e., the Battle Creek Co.) might bring out which would come into competition with Corn Flakes in Canada. The Battle Creek Companies were not to manufacture or sell in Canada at any time in the future, a cereal product which would come into competition with Sanitas Toasted Corn Flakes.

The secrets of manufacture were to be divulged; necessary machinery and material was to be furnished.

The Canadian people had obtained a charter, and were carrying on business under the name of the Battle Creek Health Food Company, Limited. The charter was issued by the Province of Ontario on the 8th March, 1905, with the full approval of the Kelloggs to the use and adoption of that name.

On the 10th December, 1906, an agreement which is necessarily the foundation of this action, was executed between Sanitas Nut Food Company Limited and Dr. Kellogg of the one part, and the Battle Creek Health Food Company of the second part. This company was then carrying on its business at London, Ontario. The consideration, $75,000, was stipulated for. The parties of the first part claiming to be absolute owners of and to have the exclusive right to the trade marks, trade names, secret formulae and recipes for the manufacture and sale of the cereal food known as "Sanitas Toasted Corn Flakes" purported to sell to the company these trade marks, trade names, secret formulae and receipes and the sole and absolute and exclusive right to manufacture and sell the product in the Dominion of Canada.

Development in Canada

In all this there was, in the beginning, absolute honesty and good faith on the part of all concerned. The business in Ontario was established and received the kindliest aid and sympathy from the parent company and all associated with it. This was not entirely disinterested, for the purchase price was payable in instalments and unless success had been attained, the price would not have been forthcoming. There was no thought or idea of defrauding or misleading the public. The Canadian concern was treated as the legitimate offspring of the American. Although the goods were put up and marketed in cartons substantially identical with the American, these cartons, save in the case of some few sent by the American Company, indicated the place of origin as London, Ontario, and indicated the Canadian Company as the manufacturer and the vendor. The goods manufactured were manufactured on the original formulae and its improvements. They were identical with the American goods. The desire of the American Company was that the goods should be as they were identical in all respects, so as to maintain the same high standard of manufacturing excellence.

The advertisements published in the American magazines circulated very largely in Canada, had imprinted upon them the statement "Canadian trade supplied by Battle Creek Toasted Corn Flake Company, London, Ontario."

"Sanitas" was found to be a word of ill omen and only induced the dyspeptic to eat the food, so "Kellogg" became the emphasised trade name and the advertisements were framed to induce the healthy to partake. This was a legitimate development and the Canadian company was permitted to share in it.

At the time the first of these suits was instituted, the goods were marketed by the defendants in Canada in cartons quite dissimilar from those used by both plaintiff and defendant up to that time. When the second suit was instituted, the cartons used were practically undistinguishable from the trade standpoint, from those used by the plaintiffs.

The answer to the action is in the first place an attempt to show that the defendants did not acquire the right they thought they acquired, owing to defective title on the part of their grantors, and also to show that the right was merely to market goods in the name "Sanitas Toasted Corn Flakes."

I think this is effectively answered by the evidence establishing acquiescence on the part of the defendant, in all that was done by the plaintiffs.

Compared to Ford Situation

It is then argued that the plaintiffs have no right because the whole transaction was such a fraud upon the public that the plaintiffs cannot invoke the equitable jurisdiction of the Court. In this case I think the principle relied upon has no application. The transaction here is no more fraudulent than the manufacture of Ford motor cars

Displays the Greatest Silent Sellers

Good Salesmen May Possess Genius to the Extent of About Two Per Cent., But the Other Ninety-Eight Per Cent. is Made up of Common Sense and Hard Work—Pointers on Drawing Business to the Store

From the experiences of P. A. KENNEDY, a retailer in Brandon, Man.

BEFORE starting in to deal with points pertaining directly to selling methods, I would for just a few moments say a few words about the buying of your stock, the kind of goods to buy and where to buy them. The foundation of every sale is "the buying of the article." There is no truer maxim than the saying "goods that are well bought are half sold."

Let us take a practical illustration: suppose one of you men to be a live grocer on one of the main streets, with a good-sized business. On Saturday morning you go down to one of your best and most reputable wholesale fruit houses and buy fifty barrels of No. 1 apples. On Monday morning you place the apples on display in your store. Having bought them from a reputable house, and deep down in your heart you know that both the quality and the price is right, naturally you are proud of your goods and you become enthusiastic over your buy. What follows?

Quality—Price—Enthusiasm

You give vent to your enthusiasm by telling every customer who enters your store about the fine apples you have for sale, and before the week is closed you find you have disposed of the whole fifty barrels. Now, what sold the goods? First of all, the quality; secondly, the price and thirdly, as a result of the first and second, your enthusiasm. But that is not all. Your scores of customers who bought the apples are sure to be pleased and not only will they come again but they will very likely, directly or indirectly, bring new customers. A quick turnover with a fair profit.

Let us take the other side: suppose you went to a house that you were not so sure of, and when you placed the apples on display Monday morning you found they were not quite up to your expectations. You are not anxious to tell your customers of your buy, you will lack the enthusiasm, and, possibly, after several weeks, in order to get rid of the goods, you will have to almost give them away. Here you have a slower turnover, decreased profits, and, the chances are, dissatisfied customers, or, in other words, loss of business. This same illustration can be applied to any line of goods or business. This brings out my first point on salesmanship.

A Word For Wholesalers

Goods that are well bought are half sold, or, in other words, in order to sell goods you must be enthusiastic and you cannot be enthusiastic when the quality is not there. Still another point in buying. Not only is it essential for you to see that the goods are right but you should convince yourself solidly in your own mind that the house you are buying from is right. Once you have done this, you should confine your account, as far as possible, to that one house, make your account worth while looking after, and you can rest assured that wholesale house will take care of it. If there are any real good buys going, such accounts as yours will get first preference, and more important still, especially in just such times as we are passing through now, if you need financial assistance at any time, that house will give it to you if it is at all possible.

I think I am quite safe in saying that there are very few retail men in this province who at some time or another do not require support from their wholesalers.

This article is the substance of an address delivered by P. A. Kennedy, of Brandon, Man., one of the livest pharmacists in Western Canada, to some two hundred merchants enrolled in the short course on merchandising put on for the retailers of the Province of Manitoba University. The Manitoba Board of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada is deserving of credit for the part it has played, through this course, in making the retailers of the province better merchandisers.

A Few Facts on Buying

You may say this to me: "What has that got to do with the selling of goods?" It is this, gentlemen, no man can sell goods if he is worrying about a draft which he has to return the next day. This concludes the second, and, I think, very important point that I want to leave with you. Buy your goods where your credit will be best protected. Buy nothing you cannot sell at a profit, either in money or advertising. Buy what your customers want in the quantities they need and at the prices they are willing to pay.

After you have placed the stock in your store, the next problem which confronts the retailer is the successful selling of the goods. This depends almost entirely upon the attractiveness of the store, the convenience it affords, effective advertising, intelligent clerks, prompt deliveries, honest goods, service and innumerable other factors.

Pace-Makers for Salesman

Before passing on to deal with the actual personal selling of the goods, let me say that stock displays are the greatest silent selling force in modern merchandising. They are the pace-makers for the salesman. A large percentage of the sales can be traced directly to attractive store and window displays, price cards, etc. It is, therefore, obvious when I say that your selling force can be either stimulated or retarded 50 per cent. by either attractive or poor shop arrangements. Good shop arrangements are, therefore, most essential to the successful selling of goods.

Dealing with the actual closing of the transactions, I would say at the outset that probably less than 10 per cent. of all retail salesmen are skilled to the trade, the other 90 per cent. are working along in the dark, faithfully perhaps, but blindly. I am speaking in the broad sense, alluding largely to the average sales people found in the retail and departmental store. It is, therefore, essential that you supervise your sales force as you would supervise your stock.

Cleanliness and Courtesy

Skill, loyalty and interest can be aroused, you can fit and train your help to their places, but you must share with them your enthusiasm, your knowledge and your loyalty. Build up your salesmen and they will build up your business. Sales people should be impressed with the fact that patience, tact and a common sense view of the customers' wants are most essential. Courtesy towards your customers is of inestimable value; in fact, courtesy is the main spring of business life.

Do not allow a customer to enter your store without greeting him or her with a pleasant "Good morning, Mr. Brown, or Mrs. Jones" as the case may be. But, above all, do not over-do it. Every salesman should be neat and clean and, as I have just said, he should not only be polite and tactful with his customer, but he should be thoroughly conversant with the department which he represents. Not only should he know where every article is in that department or store but he should, so to speak, "understand his business."

Broadly speaking, 90 per cent. of the buying public have to depend upon the integrity of the salesman as to the actual value and quality of the goods. Let me ask—what does the average layman know about the quality and value of jewelry, teas, drugs, hardware, or, in fact, almost any commodity you might mention.

Honesty The Best Policy

This leads me to the key-stone in the arch of every successful sale—honesty. Honesty is the best policy. Honesty has its assured reward. Fraud is a bubble. Truth is a rock that cannot burst

It is good business to live and let live. You are all familiar with a paragraph which I am going to quote to you, written by that great English writer, Shakespeare, in the Merchant of Venice—"If I can once catch him on the hip I will feed fat the ancient grudge." You know what happened, he got caught himself; and so will every salesman who adopts this method of getting business.

I have spoken in the broad term of the salesman "knowing his business." When he approaches his client the salesman must bear in mind that he must first of all gain the confidence of his prospect. To obtain that confidence, the salesman must in one way or another prove to his client that he is thoroughly conversant as to the quality and value of the particular line of merchandise in question, be it jewelry, dry goods or musical instruments, or any of the larger commodities. Once the confidence is gained, it being taken for granted that you have the line of goods wanted, the sale is very easily closed.

Adaptability and Politeness

Adaptability and politeness are very essential, more particularly with ladies. I once heard of a very successful shoe clerk who in his knowing the likes and dislikes of women generally, was one day selling a lady a pair of shoes. His client had tried on the footwear and one of the shoes seemed to fit a little tighter than the other. The lady remarked "one of my feet must be larger than the other." The wily clerk replied, "No, madam, one of your feet is smaller than the other." I think you see the point I am driving at.

Kindness to children at all times, whether they are accompanied by their parents or not, is good business. Gentlemen never overlook the fact that the kiddies of today are the men and women of tomorrow.

As I said at the outset, deep down in your heart you must know first of all that your goods are right. Naturally, if you have any license to be on the floor as a salesman, you become enthusiastic over your merchandise. Give vent to your enthusiasm in your own natural way and you will find the closing of big deals, not only easy, but a pleasure.

Honest goods and enthusiasm are the two main essentials in closing your first sale. Maintain that quality, give service and the other sales will close themselves. We find particularly noticeable that a large percentage of our new business is a direct result of previous sales which were well and successfully closed.

Closing a Big Deal

Speaking of closing big deals: In August, 1920, when I was president of the Brandon Board of Trade, I went to Eastern Canada on a holiday. Before leaving I made up my mind that I was going to sell a fine big, brick and reinforced concrete warehouse which the city of Brandon had built for a wholesale dry goods firm in 1914, and which,

P. A. KENNEDY

Brandon, Man., pharmacist and former president of the Board of Trade of that city, whose views on "Selling Methods That Bring Results," are not at all theoretical, but are based on actual experience and practice.

so to speak, was a white elephant on the city's hands all these years. I arrived in Toronto and started out full of enthusiasm and a determination that I was going to dispose of that warehouse. I called upon several big jobbing houses and laid before them my proposition, and, although I had received some very nice and pleasant interviews, nevertheless, I was turned down at every call. I kept on going, and finally walked into the office of the general manager of one of Canada's largest farm implement houses. I was very nicely received but was told they had no intention of making further extensions in Western Canada. I pressed hard my claim, and kept on pressing, until finally I knew my hearer was becoming interested. This gave me new life, so I put forth the best argument that was in me, with the result that he called into his office the vice-president of the firm, and in less than six weeks I had closed with that house a deal running close to $140,000. Faith, enthusiasm and determination closed that deal.

Drawing Business to Store

I merely mention these actual experiences of mine to give you what I have found to be the real foundation of the art of selling goods. With confidence, enthusiasm and determination you can accomplish anything. Why was it that the line of battle in Flanders held by our Canadian soldiers was never broken? Simply because they knew they had right on their side and coupled with that confidence was an enthusiasm and determination that struck terror into the heart of every opposing Hun, who no doubt must have known his goods were not up to par.

How to draw business to your store—it might be of interest to you to hear of some of the ways which we have found most successful in our own business. In fact, it is not my intention to talk theory. I have tried, as far as possible, to base the main topics of my address to you upon my own practical experience, and which I have found to work out successfully.

Starting With Limited Capital

When I started in business in Brandon sixteen years ago, I had a very limited capital; in fact, so very limited I do not just know if I am even justified in calling it capital. I was told I should be prepared to lose money for the first six months, but I could not afford to lose money for even the first week, so I made up my mind I was going right out after business. Two days before I opened my store I sent out an invitation of a type-written letter, properly addressed and signed with the pen, to every lady householder in the city, announcing our business policies and the opening of our store on a certain date.

My store was very small but neat and attractive. I backed my letters up with newspaper advertising, and I want to tell you, gentlemen, that not only did I pay expenses but I made money from the day I opened.

We use these letters from time to time whenever we have something extra special to announce, and I can tell you it is the very best kind of advertising.

Opportunity Knocks Once

There is a saying that "Fortune knocks at your door but once." Speaking of selling goods, I would say that the opportune moment for closing your deal comes but once. The successful salesman is always keen to realize when that moment has arrived. Most of you, no doubt, have seen deals spoiled by either showing too much variety or by too much talk after the client has reached the point where he is ready to close. There is no set rule, the temperament of no two people is exactly the same; some people can be led very easily, others have to be driven, then again others have to be given their own way.

The circular letters I have spoken of can be used successfully in every line of advertising, either for announcing a sale of chewing gum, three for 10 cts., or for attracting the largest kind of industries to your city.

Advertising With a Punch

In March, 1920, when I was president of the Brandon Board of Trade, I sent out a circular letter to a number of big prospective firms in Eastern Canada, outlining the advantages which our city had to offer as a distributing point. As a direct result of one of these letters, negotiations were entered into with a big oil company, and the following June we closed a deal for a $300,000 distributing plant which is to-day operating in our city with a staff of approximately one hundred employees. These examples are direct results of advertising, which no man can dispute.

Calls "Spiff" System a Mischievous One

This Plan Places a Weapon in the Retail Salesman's Hands That He is Very Often Likely to Misuse—Practice is Not At All Common in Canada, and Merchants Are Well Advised to Carefully Consider it Before Putting It In Operation

THE system of giving "spiffs," or special commissions, to retail clerks, is one which has been in use in Canada for many years. Up to the present time the custom has been confined to extra commissions allowed by the retail merchant to his clerk on the sale of goods which, for one reason or another, were difficult to dispose of.

The "spiff" system has of late, however, been extended in many stores in the United States to cover a special commission allowed by manufacturers to clerks in retail stores on the manufacturer's own goods. The ethics or morality of the system was lately discussed in an article in Printers' Ink, in response to a request for an opinion on the subject from an advertising agency. The enquirer was making an investigation for a client and asked a lady clerk how the product was moving. Her reply was: "Pretty fair, but you don't give 'spiffs.' I get at least 5 per cent on nearly all the articles in my department and it is a 'dead' article that does not give 'spiffs'."

Not In Practice In Canada

As far as Canadian Grocer is aware the system of manufacturers giving "spiffs" in this way has not yet been instituted in Canada, but in view of its adoption over the border, it is not unlikely that some enterprising merchant may endeavor to try it here. It is therefore worth while to give some consideration to the advisability of retail merchants permitting its introduction into their stores. The opinion arrived at by the writer of the article referred to above is that on the whole it is an intolerably mischievous plan. While it is used by many reputable concerns, he considers it can only be regarded as a thoroughly vicious system and one that causes untold harm not only to the manufacturer and consumer, but also to the retailer who allows it.

In a Class With "Own Goods Bonus"

Spiffs are in a class with the "own goods bonus," which some of the chain and department stores give their clerks for selling their own special brands. Theoretically, there is a lot to be said in favor of the plan of giving a clerk extra commission for pushing certain goods. It is a merchant's undoubted right to promote the sale of any merchandise he chooses and to use any legitimate method to accomplish his purpose. In actual practice, though, the "spiff" system does not fulfil this theory. It places a weapon in the retail salesman's hands that he is very likely to misuse. Unless he is built in a heroic mould, he is not able to withstand the temptation to use the system unwarrantably.

Evil of "Spiffs"

The trouble with the "spiff" system is that it is an attempt on the part of the retailer to defeat the working of consumer demand. In many cases the clerk who gets extra pay for selling certain things is likely to dissuade a customer from buying a definite brand for which she came into the store. Of course, if the buyer has no choice and if the proferred article is as good as any other the store carries, there is no harm in selling the "spiffed" merchandise. In like manner the "own goods" bonus or the manufacturer's special bonus is unobjectionable, if the customer is allowed free sway in her choice and no attempt is made to substitute on her definitely expressed demand.

But that is just where human nature is weak. If the salesman knows that he personally will make a few cents every time he succeeds in switching a customer over to the article he wants to sell, he is going to seize every opportunity to do so. In many cases, "spiffed" merchandise is undesirable. For some reason it does not sell. That is why a "spiff" is attached to it. Too many salesmen will not show customers anything but these "spiffs." This does an injustice to the store. It gives customers the idea that the stock is inadequate. It may be taken as a fairly safe conclusion that a client who once gets the idea that he has been sold a "spiff" will avoid that store in future. Hence the system is likely to cost the retailer vastly more than he will ever get out of it.

Reverts to "Caveat Emptor" Principle

The trouble with this whole scheme of selling, says the editor of Printers' Ink, is that it causes a reversion to the caveat emptor principle. For a time the retailer steps down from the professional standard of his job and becomes a mere trader. Professionally it is the duty of the merchant to see that the best interests of the customer are always served. Marshall Field taught us the wise selfishness of this course.

The reader may perhaps be able to quote instances where the system has worked well. If so, Canadian Grocer will be pleased to hear of them or to hear opinions of merchants on the advantages or disadvantages of the system generally. As far as can be judged at present, however, the system appears to be of doubtful value, and one that should receive the serious consideration of the merchant in its various aspects before it is put in operation.

Newspaper advertising is also excellent but in order to make advertising of any kind pay you must put a "punch" into it. You know what I mean. Make your advertising stand out with a real message in it, either with attractive prices, or something of interest said, which will hold the attention of the reader.

Always be a Booster

My subject is "Selling methods that produce results." Has it ever occurred to you when you are associating with your fellow business men, meeting them with a kindly good fellowship spirit, taking an active interest in the promoting of the welfare of your town or city, that you are actually helping to sell your wares? Ask yourself the question. "Have your fellow business men ever put any business in your way?" If not, then you can rest assured you are not doing your duty to the community in which you are living, or in other words, you are a "saprophite," sapping the life out of the community and putting nothing back in return. On the other hand, if you are associating with your fellow retailers as you should be; if you are helping to build up your city, you can at once recall many instances where valuable trade has been put in your way as a direct result of your local activities.

In conclusion, let me convey this message to you. Not only should you put enthusiasm into your buying, into the attractiveness of your store, into your dealing with your customers and into your advertising, but into the community in which you are making your living. Be a booster at every turn of the road.

KELLOGG DECISION WILL BE APPEALED

at Ford City in Canada by the Canadian Company, everyone knowing that these are manufactured by a branch company, the parent company being in Detroit.

The contention made is too wide and quite unwarranted by the cases. This being my opinion of the case upon the merits, I think it better not to follow the example of the parties and hold the case for a long period for the purpose of preparing elaborate reasons, but to start the case upon its career, with these findings of the fact, and my opinion as to the legal questions involved. They can be, if necessary, more elaborately discussed upon appeal.

How this Grocer Meets the "Cut" Prices

The Problem Worked Out Its Own Solution in This Instance Because the Advertised Line at the Lower Price Did Not Represent Quality—Public Appreciates Service and Quality

MONTREAL.—Local grocers are loud in their complaint about the price cutting in large departmental and "cut-rate" stores in this city. Every evening the local papers carry at least five big lists of cut prices on staple grocery lines and many re ail grocers have complained of the effect upon their business. It is therefore interesting to hear the story of one local grocer who has no complaint to make and claims he has, as far as his trade is concerned, made himself immune to the inroads of price-cutters.

Features Service

Here is the story as told to a Canadian Grocer representative by Alex. Davidson, proprietor of a grocery store at 4907 Sherbrooke St., Westmount. "At first I was troubled by the advertisements I saw in the paper quoting prices on grocery lines below what they cost me. If I had continued to be troubled, I would have been in a fine fix now for two cut-rate stores have opened near me, and the circular sent out by one of the stores quotes shockingly low prices. I have ceased wondering how they buy at the prices they do. In fact one look at the shelves of one of these stores explained. That however was the least of my troubles. The departmental stores with their C. O. D. system seemed the worst. For a time it looked bad. Customers were telling me how much cheaper they could buy the same brands down town. I could say nothing.

Works Its Own Solution

"Finally I learnt how to fight it, through a discussion I had with one of my customers. She wanted to buy a dozen of a certain brand of assorted soups. She asked the price and I told her $1.90. For some time previous she had been giving me the same order and had assorted the dozen to her liking but this time I was surprised when she told me that she could buy the same soups down town for $1.75. I explained to her that that was just exactly what it cost me and that I was entitled to a little profit at least. I asked her to tell her husband just what profit there was in the line. I was confident that he would understand. However he insisted that she would have to get the order at the departmental store if I could not meet the price. I refused as nicely as I could and she left. I felt then that I had to do something or I would be losing all my trade in the same way.

Customer Comes Back

"A few days later this same woman came into the store and ordered a dozen of the same brand of soup. I feigned surprise and in an off hand way mentioned that she must use a lot of soup. 'Oh no,' she said, 'I haven't had any since I got my order from you last. I did order some that I saw advertised by a departmental store but when they were delivered I found that the assortment was of soups that I would never use. I sent them back.'

"When she told me that, I knew at once what that store had done and told her that I would be only too pleased to quote her the same price on the varieties the other store had sent her. Knowing her choice by experience, I never thought that she might take the soups which of necessity come with every shipment of that particular brand and which every grocer finds hard to move. The outcome was that this customer came back to me and has never since been tempted by the so-called bargains offered by cut-rate stores. Personally I always feel that there is a 'nigger in the wood-pile.'

Appreciate Quality and Service

"I have come to the conclusion that no matter how thrifty a customer is she demands and appreciates service and quality, a thing that is always lacking at these so called bargain counters. I believe in a fair price with a fair profit but always sold with the guarantee of a reputation for the best service and the best quality."

A number of instances of dissatisfaction of customers through dealing at cut-rate stores have come to the attention of Canadian Grocer and in each case the "family grocer" has benefited by the experience of the customer. The grocer who features quality and service wins out in the end, for he holds the confidence of the people.

Solving the Late Order Problem by Telephoning Customers in Advance

A Call to Customers Not Only Gets Orders in Early but Gets Bigger Orders—One Grocer Keeps Telephone List and Believes it Helps Sales

MONTREAL.—Many grocers are weekly faced with the trouble and inconvenience of getting the Saturday order out in time. The attitude of most customers seems to be that their grocer has nothing to do other than prepare their order and deliver it whenever they care to place it. It is evidently thoughtlessness and can be remedied by a little diplomacy on the part of the grocer. The following shows how two grocers in this city have practically eliminated the last minute congestion on Saturday morning.

Calls Customers on Friday

Every Friday morning some one in Henry Russel's store, at 847 St. Catherine St., West, calls a list of customers and suggests in a polite way that they place their order on Friday evening if possible so that the clerks can get it out on the first delivery in the morning and so save the congestion at noon hour. The request is made in such a way that it leaves the impression with the customer that the store is anxious to give particular attention to their order.

Victor Russel assured Canadian Grocer that the scheme is a success in a number of ways. In the first place it gets the orders in earlier but it also provides a means of increasing sales. When the conversation with the customer over the telephone has been opened by speaking of a better service in delivery, the clerk has a good opportunity to speak of special lines. "We have found that it has built up our sales of fresh vegetables, meats and fruit. Another point is that it shows the customers that we take an interest in their order and that means a lot to the business.

Preparing the List

"We have built up a list of customers who have telephones. We started with our old customers and put their names down in a book kept for the purpose. Week by week we add to the list. Every time a new name appears on our order list we put it down in the book and note the telephone number. When Friday noon comes we simply have to go down the list in that book and check off the names as they are called. The results are surprising. In some cases it means making a special note opposite the name in the book. Some customers are punctual in placing their orders and it would be an insult to them to suggest that they place their orders earlier when they are in the habit of having it in early on Friday. When this note appears in the list, the clerk simply calls to mention the fact that we have a particularly nice line that the customer might like for

Misdirected Judgment

IN HIS judgment on the Kellogg corn flake case, Mr. Justice Middleton unnecessarily refers disparagingly to the product itself. He said that his "analysis of corn flakes would be that it is 49 per cent. advertising, 49 per cent. profit, one per cent. carton and one per cent. flavoring and the food value as a trace merely." It can safely be assumed that he did not analyze it.

Just why he went out of his way to make such a declaration in connection with his decision is difficult to say. The product was not on trial, rather the opinions of the two litigants as to their rights in Canada.

The real foundation of the present corn flake business was the sanitarium of Dr. Kellogg in Battle Creek where he made and served this dish to his patients. These patients found it a wholesome food and as they went out to their homes continued to order it by mail. Thus the business got its start, and is there anyone (with the exception of Mr. Justice Middleton) who will say that it could develop to such proportions if the food value was "but a trace?" Advertising has undoubtedly helped to develop the corn flake business but it was not the foundation of it.

Will Margarine Be Retained?

WHAT THE government's action will be in the way of extending the act permitting the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine in Canada, is still a matter of supposition, but the whole question is to be discussed shortly in the House.

The only opposition to such an act appears to come from the dairy interests. Retailers who handle the product and the consuming public have certainly lost no opportunity to impress upon the government, the necessity of continuing such an act, thus permitting the manufacture and importation of a product that is clean and wholesome, and in demand by various sections of the community.

Through the efforts of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, a memorandum has been placed in the hands of the members of parliament, pointing out a host of reasons why all restrictions on the importation, manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, should be immediately removed. The demand for oleomargarine is steadily increasing, and it is important to note, in any effort to have it retained in Canada, that the Chief Dominion Analyst himself, puts the stamp of approval upon it, by declaring that it contains no harmful ingredient.

The National Council of Women have waited on the government, pointing out that oleomargarine is a food that is pure, nutritious and wholesome, and is a necessity in the poorer homes of the country, where butter is prohibitive.

Thus if the government accedes to the wishes of the dairy interests in this matter, it will do so in the face of insistent opposition on the part of the consuming public and also of the hundreds of retail grocers and other merchants who carry the product.

U. S. A. Tariff Bill

THE TARIFF BILL which the United States Government plans to make a permanent measure appears to be aimed directly on all foreign competition and it would seem that the United States is preparing to build such a high tariff wall that all outside competition will become practically impossible. One of the leading features in the bill is the power given the President to increase the rates fifty per cent. if conditions so warrant it, or in other words when circumstances are such that the increased importations make competition too keen. Where Canada is hit the most is in the products of the farm. Under the Fordney bill, rates on grains and livestock were considerably advanced, but in the present proposed bill, the rates are even higher. On wheat the new tariff is 30 cents per bushel of 60 lbs. and on flour 78 cents per hundred pounds, beans, 25 cents per bushel, peas, 10 cents per bushel, split peas, 20 cents per bushel, barley 20 cents per bushel, oats, 15 cents per bushel and rolled oats and similar oat products, 90 cents per one hundred pounds. The proposed duty on butter, oleomargarine and butter substitutes is 8 cents per pound; cheese, valued at less than 30 cents per pound, 5 cents per pound and when valued at 30 cents or over per pound, 25 per cent. ad valorem; poultry, live 3 cents, dressed poultry, 6 cents per pound; and eggs, 8 cents per dozen.

One of the phenomenal increases in duty is in shelled nuts, and although not affecting Canada to any extent it is interesting to the grocery trade. The tariff on shelled walnuts under the new bill is 12 cents per pound, as compared with the present duty of 4 cents, and on shelled almonds, 15 cents, as compared with the present duty of 4 cents per pound. The duty on spices varies from 2 cents to 10 cents per pound, depending upon the variety. These lines are imported into Canada direct from the producing countries and if shipped through the port of New York, they do so in bond so that these increased duties will have little bearing upon the Canadian trade. There are times, however, when nuts and spices are purchased in the New York market, but generally it only occurs when the New York market is lower than the markets in the countries of origin, such as a few months ago in the case of shelled walnuts. In cases of this kind, if the nuts are produced outside of the United States, purchased by New York brokers, and resold to Canadian purchasers, then those nuts would necessarily bear the higher tariff rate.

Holding Retail Clerks

THE COMMENTS made recently by a number of grocers about the inability of the grocery trade to command the services of the better class of young salesmen has brought to light a number of facts regarding conditions which tend to drive men out of the grocery business instead of attracting them. A grocer who has seventeen clerks in his employ stated that he could not keep all the positions in his store filled. Clerks were continually coming and going, and as soon as they had been trained into the art of salesmanship they moved into another branch of the retail business. One of the difficulties, the main one, seems to be that the hours of work are longer than in any other retail business.

Many retail grocers are ready to shorten the hours but each waits for his competitors to make a similar move, with the result that the refusal of one to comply with the suggestion spoils the whole program. Concerted action is needed.

Is He Right in Buying the Small Lot?

Grocer Discusses the Question of Quantity Buying— A Splendid Adaptation of Contention That it Never Pays to Carry Goods Beyond Normal Turnover Period

By HENRY JOHNSON, Jr.

HERE IS a man who takes figures and applies them to the analysis of his own daily business.

Dear Mr. Johnson:—Last evening when a Blank Baking Powder salesman was in, two things were called to my attention, first the spread between the price of one pound and ten pound cans, the pounds costing 28c. and the tens costing 16c. Seems to me that is some difference.

Next, your article in issue of January 17th. According to the company's records I use three dozen cans per month. The salesman claims the best way for me to buy the powder is in their big deal quantity—sixteen dozen every six months, with seven, eight and fifteen per cent. off. I claim the deal of six dozen with four per cent. is the best way. I am sending you my figures according to the article and want to know if they are correct and if I am right in buying the small deal.

Figures from large deal of 7-8-15 per cent., makes cost $3.02 per dozen.

1st month sales, 3 doz. at 35c., $12.60, cost $9.06, gross earnings, $3.54.

Repeat that five times for 15 dozen and I have gross earnings which total $17.70. I employ $45.37 capital, so my gross on capital employed is 39 per cent. plus.

On the smaller deal of six dozen at cost of $3.22 for the same five months my figures look this way:

Month sales. 3 doz., $12.60 with gross earnings of $2.94.

I do that five times, showing earnings of $14.70 with $19.30 capital employed, and that shows capital earnings of 76 per cent. plus.

Following your method of reaching net earnings, but assuming an increase of two instead of three per cent. in expenses each month, I figure as follows:

Gross Earnings (all Per Month)	Expenses	Net Earnings
$3.54 1st month.	Deduct	17 per cent.
$3.54 2nd "	"	19 per cent.
$3.54 3rd "	"	21 per cent.
$3.54 4th "	"	23 per cent.
$3.54 5th "	"	25 per cent.
on sales	$12.60, $2.14,	$1.40
" "	12.60, 2.40,	1.14
" "	12.60, 2.64,	.90
" "	12.60, 2.90,	.64
" "	12.60, 3.25,	.29

Capital, $45.37. Net Earnings, $4.37. Shows 9.6 per cent. plus. If we use same figures and add only one per cent. extra to expenses per month, we shall show net of 12.6 per cent.

Small Deal Figures Show up Better

On six dozen cans:

$2.94 1st month.	Deduct	17 per cent.
$2.94 2nd "	"	19 per cent.
$2.94 3rd "	"	17 per-cent.
$2.94 4th "	"	19 per cent.
$2.94 5th "	"	17 per cent.
Sales $12.60	Expenses $2.14.	Net	.80.
" 12.60	" 2.40	"	.64.
" 12.60	" 2.14	"	.80.
" 12.60	" 2.40	"	.64.
" 12.60	" 2.14	"	.80.

This shows earnings of $3.68 on capital of $19.30, per 19 per cent. plus.

That is a splendid adaptation of my contention that it never pays for any merchant to carry goods beyond the normal turnover period, no matter what advantage may seem to accrue. It is well also to note that all questions of stock handling, rehandling, storage and wastage expense are omitted from this demonstration.

There are exceptions to all rules and such must not be overlooked. But really the exceptions are few. Also it is better to err on the side of conservative stock carrying always. If any man will use his imagination a little and picture to himself his stock all along the line reduced to a minimum—say cut in two from its present quantity—and the money thereby represented invested in sound bonds with interest coming in automatically, he will be apt to get the right slant on this question.

And, while reduced handling and expense thereby entailed on one item may not cut much ice, a horizontal reduction which results from putting minimum buying into practice throughout the store will work marvels in the expense account.

This correspondent has the right idea and I wrote him to stick to his plan of short buying and rapid turnover with the formation of the habit of drawing out his earnings in money and putting away a surplus each month.

British Columbia Merchant's Story

A merchant in British Columbia writes me that he likes my stuff. He has been in business a dozen years. Made money from the start which he invested in real estate and promptly lost. He kept no books and got into a bad mix-up so that if his jobbers had not been willing to wait they probably would have collected 50 per cent. and another man would have been wiped out. But they helped and to-day this man is rather well out of the hole.

When he realized he had to know where he was heading in, he took night classes in bookkeeping. I wonder just how many grocers would think enough of their future to do that? He did that for two winters, and now he knows what he is doing. Note, further, that when he started he was without any experience and he says he has trade papers to thank for his success.

Feeling "rather disappointed" with results last year, he writes me for advice, for he has only played even. But it is noteworthy that he knows this, whereas many do not know where they stand at any time. One thing he says which I quote:

"I know you will criticise me for not charging the business with rent or interest on capital invested; but go ahead and say what you like. We are a good distance apart!"

I like that. Shows he is a good sport. And the fact that he expects me to make this criticism shows I do not need to make it—he knows it himself already.

He cut 20 per cent. of stock values to cover depreciation. He has some keen competition and it seems to be of the ignorant order, but that is everywhere and evidently this man can handle it O. K.

Immediately I wrote him to cover the main points, some of which are all right now and some are in need of strengthening. At first glance, I figured his average margin on sales as only a little better than 13 per cent., but as I re-figure now, I see he makes just short of 16 per cent., and that is probably near the limit on groceries in his territory. Having in mind groceries exclusively I told him to get all of 16-2/3 per cent. But on the general merchandise plan he should be able to get at least 18 per cent. and perhaps 20 per cent. on the average for all except groceries, and that would enhance his earnings from half to one per cent. along the line. Add that to the 2/3 per cent. and the total enhancement may run from one to nearly two per cent.—from $400 to $800 a year.

Splendid Turnover Shown

He has a splendid turnover, apparently running to nearly eighteen and a half times. Therefore, he has little surplus to care for and bother him. So by pushing profitable lines, by displaying such money-makers and trade-builders as fruits and vegetables which maybe his neighbors do not handle with much skill, by setting his own pace and not waiting to have others show whether "it can be done," I think he can build up his profits considerably. I know perishables are hard to handle many months every year in his region, for the winters are long and very severe, but many grocers in such places as Moose

Ontario Retail Grocers to Hold a Convention

Retail grocers throughout Ontario will meet in convention in Toronto at the Prince George Hotel, on May 17 and 18. The program for this convention has not yet been drafted, but many matters of vital interest to the trade will be discussed, and it is expected that the attendance will be very large. At any rate every effort is being put forth to make this convention a big thing for the retail grocer. Further announcements will be given in succeeding issues.

Grocer is Hurled Into the Street When an Explosion Occurs

Montreal.—A Montreeal grocer thought that a coal-oil tank was empty and ordered three plumbers to do some work on it, but it wasn't! The grocer was hurled into the street by the explosion that followed and the three plumbers were knocked down.

J. A. Filion, a grocer of 634 Craig Street, East, Montreal, one day last week was having some work done on a coal-oil tank in the cellar of his store. Mr. Filion at the time was standing beside his counter near the front of the store. When the explosion occurred, in some manner he was so quickly transported to the middle of the street that he cannot now recall how he got there, except that there is a large hole in the front window of the store which looks as though he had passed through it. Further than that he has no recollection of how he reached the middle of Craig Street. The three men working in the cellar were thrown to the ground, but suffered no injuries. Canned goods and broken bottles littered the floor and a fire broke out which was quickly extinguished by the fire department.

The theory is that the sudden displacement of the air by the explosion smashed the front window before the proprietor passed through it, since Mr. Filion received little or no injury from his experience.

E. D. SMITH & SON WIN TWO ACTIONS AGAINST RAILWAYS

E. D. Smith & Son, Ltd., Winona, Ont., have been awarded damages in two suits in connection with fruit shipments. One action against the C. P. R. was settled out of court, the C. P. R. having paid the entire claim of $700. The action was the outcome of the damage done a car of grapes and apples shipped to Winnipeg in December, 1920. Owing to the car being too much heated, when the grapes arrived eleven days later in Winnipeg they were practically cooked. The apples were not much harmed.

A claim was also made against the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville railway for $236. damages to a car of plums, peaches and pears shipped to Montreal, and which arrived in such bad shape that it had to be sold at anything it would bring.

FISHING WITH TRAPS IS WIPING OUT SALMON

Washington.—The salmon supply in Alaskan waters will be completely wiped out within a few years if trap fishing is not prohibited, William Paul an Alaskan fisherman of Indian descent, told the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee the other day. Mr. Paul said that native fishermen in south-eastern Alaska, anxious to have someone present their side of the fisheries question to Congress, had subscribed a fund to send him 4,000 miles on such a mission.

Traps placed at advantageous points catch as many as 75,000 salmon a day, the committee was told. Seine, fishermen, Mr. Paul declared, are unable to make catches that in any way compare with the yield of traps.

He criticized the United States Bureau of Fisheries, which he declared, had "failed to perform its duty at all stages in its supervision of Alaskan fisheries."

Earlier Closing Would Make it Easier to Get More Competent Help

Better Class of Salesmen Shun the Grocery Business Because the Hours Are Too Long—Some Montreal Grocers Would Like to See Shorter Hours

MONTREAL.—A number of local retail grocers are once again bringing up the question of shorter working hours for the grocery business, in the hope that their plea may at least awaken wider interest than it has in the past. The help problem in this city has done much to direct attention towards shorter hours and some retailers have expressed the hope that at least in sections of the city some arrangement may be made whereby groups of retail grocers will voluntarily close their doors one hour earlier.

To Solve Help Problem

R. Roderique, proprietor of the Claremont Grocery, 4945 Sherbrooke St., in discussing the question with a Canadian Grocer representative said, "Just so long as it is necessary for grocers to keep their doors open until seven o'clock in the evening, will the grocery trade be faced with the problem of getting and holding efficient help. Either the grocer must pay much higher wages than the other businesses or else be content with help that cannot find work elsewhere. No sooner does a grocer get a clerk trained to his liking than he becomes dissatisfied with the long hours and, being a real salesman, finds work in another branch of the retail business where the hours are not so long. As it is, the store is open until seven o'clock and by the time things are cleaned up for the night it is at least a quarter past seven before the clerk can start for home. It is at least eight o'clock before he has his supper and his evening is practically spoiled, if he wants to go to a theatre. It is little wonder then that it is hard to hold good clerks. At the present time all we can get is the help that cannot find work where the hours are more pleasant. It is not profitable to employ men who work in a grocery store for the sake of a job. That kind are apt to drive business away because their heart is not in their work. It is far cheaper for the grocer to pay more for real salesmen, but the demand for such men is so widespread that the grocery trade cannot attract them, unless almost impossible wages are offered.

Better Type Needed.

"Montreal grocers at least will recognize the fact that there is a dearth of the better type of men available for the grocery business. To my thinking shorter hours, or earlier closing, is necessary. I for one favor six o'clock closing and am willing to put both time and money behind the movement to obtain it. To me, personally, it makes little difference, for I own my business but I can see that I could have a better class of help in my store, who would bring me more business, if it were not for the fact that that class of men shun the grocery business on account of the long hours."

Much Gained and Little Lost

Alex. Davidson, proprietor of a grocery store at 4907 Sherbrooke St., West, Montreal, expressed practically the same ideas in this connection but enlarged on the fact that the proprietor has far more to gain by earlier closing than he could possibly lose. "I have closed my store," said Mr. Davidson to a Canadian Grocer representative, "earlier than the other grocers around me, during the summer months, and have found that I lost little or nothing. If a grocer takes a little time to explain to his customers that he is going to close his store sharp at six for the benefit of his clerks, they will understand and cooperate by making their purchases a little earlier. The reason grocery stores have kept open later than other retail businesses is that every grocer feels that if he takes the initiative some of his trade will go to other stores. If a grocer feels that way about it he does not rate his own service very high."

Some Localities Differ

The problem is a different one in other localities of the city. One retail grocer explained that he serves a number of people who are at work all day, people who go to business and who are unable to make their purchases until after six o'clock. In that locality, the grocer renders a service that makes it necessary for him to keep open shop until after the down-town hour of closing. Still, in the residential districts, there is no reason why people cannot have all their provisions ordered before six and in those districts it remains for the retail grocers to come to an understanding between themselves.

One Grocer Out of Eleven

In one residential district of Montreal there are eleven retail groceries. Ten of the proprietors have expressed their willingness to close their doors at six o'clock provided the others will do likewise but the eleventh absolutely refuses to conform and so they all stay open as long as the law allows. For the improvement of help conditions the practice must be general. The impression that work in the grocery business entails drudgery for long hours every day must be destroyed before grocers can hope to get the best class of salesmen into their employ.

Letters To The Editor

NUMBER OF BANANAS TO THE BUNCH

Editor, Canadian Grocer:—

Can you supply the following information? How many dozen bananas approximately are on stalks of the following sizes: eight hand, ten hand and twelve hand? If there are other sizes not enumerated above, would be thankful for the same information regarding.

Is there a standard rule allowing so many pounds for the stalk itself, that would enable one to arrive at the number of dozen after weighing a bunch? Here bananas are retailed by the dozen, though purchased in bunches by the pound.

I fully appreciate the fact that bananas on some stalks are larger than others, and consequently weigh more even though the stalk itself is no heavier. But I feel other dealers must have had the same trouble with this fruit, and solved it to their satisfaction. You perhaps may be able to give some information that would help.

St. Johns, Newfoundland.

C. P. E.

Editor's Note: On an eight hand bunch of bananas there is approximately nine dozen; on ten hand, eleven to twelve dozen; twelve hand, fourteen to fifteen dozen; and on a nine hand, ten to eleven dozen.

There is no standard for the weight of the stock. The weight varies considerably running from four to eight pounds depending partly upon the size of bunch and also upon the greenness of the stock.

A green bunch of bananas will weigh considerably more than a ripe bunch simply because a certain amount of moisture evaporates in ripening. The shrinkage in ripening averages ten per cent.

If you desire to know the actual count on a bunch of bananas, a simple method is to start at the top of the bunch and as you count each banana put a small chalk mark on it. There will be no chance then of counting the same banana twice.

Editor, Canadian Grocer:—

In the Canadian Grocer some time ago you recited a case where a Judge gave his decision against the legality of operating punch boards, and in your next issue there was further comment on the case. The Chief of Police has recommended against them here but certain aldermen think they are within the law. I would appreciate your sending me copies of the paper, or information re the case.

Legislation Looking to Control of Matches Made and Used in Canada

Proposed Act Provides That All Matches Shall be Packed in Boxes or Cartons Containing Not More Than 500 Matches

OTTAWA, April 17.—Parliament will be called upon shortly to enact legislation looking to improvement in the manufacture, importation, and distribution of matches in Canada. At a conference in Ottawa, a few days ago, of those immediately interested, including manufacturers, wholesale merchants, retail merchants and others, the proposed regulations were carefully studied and approved.

From time to time it has been represented to the Dominion Fire Commissioner that as inferior grades of matches are in use in the Dominion and constitute a serious menace to life and property, the Dominion Government should enact legislation to control the quality of matches manufactured or imported, used in Canada. The matter was brought before the last annual meeting of the Dominion Fire Prevention Association. After consideration, the Association decided to urge the matter upon the attention of the Government. The matter has also been discussed by various other organizations and strong representations have been made to the Government.

Dealing with methods of packing, the proposed act provides that all matches shall be packed in substantial boxes or cartons, containing not more than 500 matches. When more than 300 are packed in any one box, they are to be arranged in approximately two equal portions, the heads of the matches being laid in opposite directions.

Under the new regulations, all boxes, cartons and packages will have plainly marked on the outside, the name of the manufacturer, the country of origin, the brand or trademark under which the matches are manufactured or imported and distributed and the words "Canadian Government Standard, Class A Matches or Canadian Government Standard Class B. Matches."

The standards are so drawn up as to provide the maximum of safety. The regulations were recently laid before a meeting of the Advisory Committee of the Grocers' Section of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, who sent them on to the Dominion Committee of the Grocers' Section for their consideration.

This Firm Sends Out a List of Week-End Prices

Montreal.—Goodwins, Limited, Montreal, have adopted a new plan for advertising their grocery department. At the beginning of each week a folder is printed which is called "Week-End Prices on Groceries" and bears the dates of Thursday, Friday and Saturday of the week in question. On the two inside pages of the folder are the prices for all the staple grocery lines, alphabetically arranged. On the back cover of the folder is a blank order form similar to the order forms used by the clerks.

Every order that is sent out by the store and every parcel that is carried from the store contains one of the folders. A. C. Cavanagh, sales manager of the grocery department, told a Canadian Grocer representative that although the plan has only been in effect for two weeks that many of these order forms have been returned by customers bearing requisitions for grocery supplies. These orders are sent out C.O.D. The management of the grocery not only claims success for the advertising from that point of view but states that it has meant bigger sales since the customers take time to study the list of prices and lines suggested, with the result that a bigger order is placed.

Would Enforce Law As It Now Stands In Regard to Oriental

Vancouver, B. C.—T. J. Cahill, manager of the Grandview Grocery, on Commercial Drive, Vancouver, in discussing the Oriental question, as applying to the grocery trade stated that, in his opinion, the laws already on the statutes, and the by-laws already passed by the city would curb the activity of the yellow traders, if enforced.

A Double Standard in Dealing

"There is no doubt a 'double standard' in dealing with this question," said Mr. Cahill. "The same actions that would promptly bring a white trader into the police court, are tolerated in the Chinese. This does not mean that the police are any different from the public. A woman will deal at Chinese stores that do not nearly conform to what she would expect and demand in a white tradesman. She will be served by a dirty, slovenly Oriental who blandly 'no savees' anything she might say except 'yes' or 'no'—if it suits his purpose to be ignorant of English—yet who would be prompt to resent the attendance on her of a white man so attired, and as unkempt. Purchasers will take out their purchases of vegetables wrapped in newspaper, and would brand the white retailer as both stingy and unsanitary who would do the same. She will even accept without question the weighing of her order on the most antiquated scales, but scrutinizes very carefully the weight as shown on the visible computing scales in the white grocer's store.

Harder With the White Man

"For so many years have our ideas in British Columbia of British justice and Canadian fair play impelled us to see that the Chinese coolie, ignorant and pacific, was not molested nor bullied that one gathers the impression today that we lean over backwards in our efforts to be fair with him. The impression obtains that a white man would receive a much stiffer sentence for assaulting a Chinaman than for hitting another white man, no matter what the provocation. Our super-concern for the yellow man's supposed helplessness has at any rate permitted him to thrive mightily both in his obvious business and his less evident but more lucrative activities. In the opinion of the retail merchants it is high time that all laws be made equally applicable to every individual regardless of color—pending such time as restrictive measures may be put into force dealing with any further Oriental immigration."

WESTERN ONTARIO EXPORTERS MEET IN STRATFORD

The fifth meeting of the United Exporters of Western Ontario was held recently in Stratford, when a large number of exporters were in attendance. Addresses were given by F. C. Salter, manager Foreign Departments, Canadian National Express Co., Montreal, and C. H. Ivey of London. The former spoke on conditions in Europe and the Old Land, from an industrial standpoint, and the latter on the subject of "export trade with the West Indies."

The next meeting will be held in April in Guelph.

WEEKLY GROCERY MARKET REPORTS

Statements from Buying Centres.

MARKETS AT A GLANCE

REFINED sugar made a further decline of 15c per hundred during the week, bringing the Montreal basis to $6.15.

Little activity occurred in the raw sugar market during the week, the greater portion of buying being done by operators and as option prices showed some improvement speculative buying was more pronounced, and several lots of May shipment sugars sold at 2½c c. & f. New York spot prices showed a decline from last week, the Federal Sugar Refining Co. disposed of one cargo of about 19,000 bags at 2¼c c. & f. which figures to 3.86c duty paid.

In Cuba there has been a large movement of the crop and the 185 Centrals now operating produced thus far this season 2,181,200 tons. The production for the week under review was 194,244 tons. The amount of new sugars on the plantations now stand at 341,316 tons, an increase of 5,000 tons over the previous week. It is estimated that the total amount of sugars on the Island at the present time is 1,327,389 tons.

The primary tea markets show little change as compared with a week ago. The London auctions are closed until April 28. In Colombo the quality has fallen off, but prices rule very firm even for the poorer qualities. In England there is a movement on foot to have the duty of 2d. on Java teas removed. At present there is a reduction of 2d in favor of British grown teas, which, in effect, is an additional duty on teas from Java and China. The decrease in the 1921 production of teas in India, Ceylon, Java and Sumatra is estimated at 122,500,000 lbs. In the spot market, tendencies continue with an upward trend and as quotations to the retail trade are still out of line with replacement, some further advances can be expected in the near future.

Cereals are holding fairly steady but there appears to be some weakness and irregularity in prices on rolled oats. In package cereals there is a reduction in quotations on two brands of corn flakes.

Coffees continue to show strength in primary markets, but there is little change in spot conditions.

Canned pineapple is still scarce and prices look higher. New canned lobsters are offered but owing to the short pack, prices are considerably higher than last season's pack. All canned vegetables and fruits are showing a good spring movement and it is generally considered that supplies will be well cleaned up and the new packs will come on practically a bare market.

A seasonable quietness prevails in the market for nuts, but primary markets show no indication for improvement; stocks are low and prices are firmly held.

Rices and spices continue in a firm position, quotations show no change but are firmly maintained.

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, April 19—The grocery market is this week in a chaotic condition with price cutting on every side, touching almost every line and locally taking the strength out of lines that have had every confidence of the buyers for the past few months. Sugar is again reduced. Canned goods are beyond any certain quotations and travellers are in some instances making their own prices. Soaps are in the cut and show a decline of forty and forty-five cents a case. Spices, however, have a firm and steady tone. Molasses is down and will likely go lower after the first of the new shipments arrive. Cutting has also affected cereals and although the millers report a firm market for rolled oats, wholesalers are quoting lower prices. Probably the anxiety to unload before the warm weather is responsible for this change. Rice is firm and practically free from the cutting. Fresh fruits are steady except for a lower price on strawberries and a larger supply. Potatoes are easy in price with large offerings.

CEREAL MARKET QUIET

Montreal.

CEREALS.—There is no change in the cereal market. Prices are firm but the demand is limited at this season and dealers are only buying for immediate requirements. Buckwheat flour is practically finished for the season and stocks on hand are low. Although millers claim a firm market for rolled oats and prices are said to be below the cost of milling, cutting among the wholesale trade is prevalent and various prices are noted.

EVAPORATED APPLES HIGHER

Montreal

DRIED FRUITS.—Prunes continue to feature the dried fruit market. Prices at the coast are strong and show a slight advance but New York continues to cut and there is no actual advance in local quotations. Statistics show that available supplies of prunes will not meet the demand during the summer months and then a shortage is due with an unavoidable advance in prices. Evaporated apples are nominally high in price but are almost exhausted and what are left are practically held by one organization. The price has been advanced another half cent this week. Currants and raisins are quiet without any change.

CANNED GOODS UPSET

Montreal.

CANNED GOODS.—Although the market of canned vegetables is firm with no reason for a decline, local prices are being cut. Canned tomatoes and corn are reduced 10c. per doz. It is hard to say how long this condition will last. Prices are cut in many cases below the initial cost. Canned fruits and jams come under the cut also and prices quoted are merely nominal.

RICE MARKET STEADY

Montreal.

RICE.—Rice market continues strong but there are no changes in local prices. It seems that there are sufficient stocks held locally, which were bought below present values to carry the trade and since the movement is slow, prices have not yet been advanced to the extent which primary markets warrant. Reports from the rice belt show the farmers' stocks have been pretty well cleaned up and that the millers show no anxiety to sell. The tone of the market is steady at the moment.

PACKAGE GOODS CUT

Montreal

PACKAGE GOODS.—While there are no changes officially in package goods, the statement of one of the local wholesalers summed up the present position. "There has been so much cutting in Montreal during the past two weeks that this week we have decided to teach some of the price-cutters a lesson by slashing the prices to a degree which it is impossible for them to follow. We are losing money but it may help to stop a practice which brings nobody good and creates uneasiness in the grocery market." This week local prices on most of the branded lines are away out of proportion with the quotations made by the manufacturers and are no indication of the true condition of the market.

NUT MARKET QUIET

Montreal.

NUTS.—The nut market is quiet with no feature. Walnuts have been firming up but as there is only a limited demand, local prices are unchanged. Shelled peanuts have reacted after the slump and are quoted a little higher. Brazils are comparatitvely low in price and are in big demand; very little is left locally to go into storage.

CLOVES STRONGER

Montreal.

SPICES.—The spice market is inactive but much interest is directed towards the tariff question in the United States. The fact that present duties are likely to be doubled in the new tariff will have some bearing upon the market in Canada. As Canada buys some of her spices through the United States the higher cost of importation will be reflected in the price quoted in Canada. After the Easter week the trade is quiet and no changes in price are noted. The foreign markets on cloves have stiffened sharply and buying is a little more active.

MOLASSES PRICES EASIER

Montreal.

MOLASSES.—A much easier tone is evident in the molasses market with some reductions on spot stocks. One wholesaler has brought the price down to 65c. outside the city and 68c. delivered while another wholesaler is quoting as low as 64c. in the city. The prices for the summer will likely be still lower and the opening of navigation has necessitated the moving of old stocks to make room for the fresh supplies which are expected in May. This has had a weakening influence on the market. The market may be expected to follow the trend of the sugar market. There is no change in corn syrups.

ANOTHER DROP IN SUGAR

Montreal.

SUGAR.—Another drop came in refined sugar towards the latter part of last week. The week previous a drop of 30c. was made officially after two weeks of cutting but this drop did not bring quotations in line, and another drop of 15c. followed which has brought more stability in wholesalers' quotations, but still some cutting is reported. Some retailers are selling sugar at ten pounds for sixty-one cents.

LOWER PRICES ON POTATOES

Montreal.

VEGETABLES.—The feature of the vegetable market is the lower prices on potatoes. The supply seems to be getting larger and dealers are anxious to unload. New potatoes from the south are arriving in larger quantities and prices are also easier. Onions continue high and tomatoes are easier in price with large offerings and a good demand. The variety of new vegetables on the market is large but the market is open this year as it has not been for some years back.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, April 19—The sugar situation continues to be a feature in the market for general grocery commodities. Refiners announce another reduction of fifteen cents per hundred but wholesalers' prices continue irregular and list prices seem to be entirely ignored, the prices quoted being considerably lower than list prices. Two brands of corn flakes are reduced, also one brand of mustard, stove polish and brass polish. Canned vegetables and fruits are showing a good spring movement and it is expected that the new packs will come on to a bare market. Raisins are easier with spot prices slightly lower. Prunes continue in active demand, but the New York markets appear to have developed an easier tone although Coast conditions continue firm and unchanged. Local prices on teas are unchanged but there is likely to be some advances in the near future in view of the strong position in primary markets. The potato market is easy with prices on track slightly lower. Tomatoes are easier in price while fresh fruits show little change in quotations.

BEANS UNCHANGED

Toronto.

BEANS—The market for Ontario continues steady with quotations unchanged. The offerings of foreign beans, however, have given the situation an easier undertone as it is said that these beans can be laid down here at a lower price than Ontario varieties.

CANNED GOODS ACTIVE

Toronto

CANNED GOODS.—There is an active spring demand for canned vegetables and fruits and it is now generally conceded that the market will be fairly bare of supplies when the new packs arrive. Canadian packs of the finer grades of peas are fairly well cleaned up, the majority of wholesalers having no peas to offer other than standard grades. Canned fruits are also more firmly held with pineapple the feature due to the light pack and scarcity of supplies. Clark's sliced smoked beef, No. ½ tins, is reduced to $3.45 per doz. and No. 1 tins to $5 per doz. No. ½, in glass is reduced to $3.90 per doz. and No. 1 in glass $5.90 per doz. Cascade salmon ones, is offered at $1.50 per doz. and one brand of Cohoe ½s at $1.45 per doz.

RAISINS EASIER

Toronto.

DRIED FRUITS—There appears to be some uneasiness in prunes on the New York market with buying generally of a conservative character which has created an easier feeling. Prices in New York are lower than at the Coast, the market at the latter point showing practically no change, continuing strong. In the local situation, there is no change and the demand for prunes continues active with prices firmly maintained. The raisin market continues to show signs of weakening, with some of the local wholesalers quoting at about a one cent reduction.

HIGHER TEAS IN SIGHT

Toronto.

TEAS.—The primary markets have been quiet owing to the Easter holidays and the London auctions will remain closed until April 28. In Colombo the quality has fallen off, due to the seasonal change, but prices rule very firm even for the poorer qualities. A movement is on foot in England to have the discriminating duty of 2d per lb. against Java teas removed. At present there is a reduction of 2d in favor of British grown teas, which, in effect, is an additional duty on teas from Java and China. It is estimated that the decrease in production of tea in India, Ceylon and China and Sumatra for the year 1921 is 122,500,000 lbs. as compared with the year 1920. There is little change in quotations on spot, but wholesalers and importers claim that their prices are still below replacement values and consequently the trade can expect some advances in the near future.

SUGAR PRICES LOWER

Toronto.

SUGAR.—Refiners announce another reduction in their list prices on refined sugar. This reduction amounts to 15c making the Montreal basis $6.15 which figures $6.49 Toronto. There still appears to be considerable price cutting among the wholesale trade and list prices seem to be entirely ignored. Wholesalers' prices to the retail trade are generally around $6.25 to $6.35.

Toronto.

SYRUPS.—There are no changes in quotations on syrups and molasses. The market holds fairly steady.

SPICE PRICES FIRM

Toronto.

SPICES.—There is little change in the market for spices, the maret is steady to firm with prices firmly maintained.

PINEAPPLES LOWER

Toronto.

FRUITS.—The demand for fresh fruits during the past week has been particularly active but with the exception of pineapples, prices are practically unchanged. Pineapples are arriving in large quantities and prices are down from 50c to $1 per case. Spanish late Valencia oranges are arriving and offered at $7.50 per case for sizes 300s and 360s.

Toronto

RICES.—There are no changes in the local conditions in the rice market. Quotations, however, are firmly held in view of the strong position of primary markets.

TOMATOES LOWER

Toronto.

VEGETABLES.—The potato market is easy with prices on track, car lots, ranging from 90c to $1.10 per bag with dealers quoting to the retail trade $1.15 to $1.30 per bag. Texas silverskin onions are quoted at $6.50 per case with yellows at $6. Florida tomatoes are slightly lower at $3.75 to $4.75 per six basket crate.

Toronto

MISCELLANEOUS.—Zebra polish is reduced to 80c per doz. Brasso small size is lower at $1.35 per doz. and large at $2.25 per doz. Keen's mustard is reduced as follows: 1-8s, $1.02 per lb.; ¼s, 96c per lb. and ½s, 94c per lb. Round clothes pins are reduced to $1.40 per five gross box. Shell brand castile soap is quoted at $6.40 per box of 100 cakes and $5.75 per case of 20 2-lb. bars. Ridgeway's Old Country Five O'clock tea is advanced 5c per lb., making the new price 70c.

MANITOBA MARKETS

WINNIPEG, April 19—Reports from the primary coffee markets state that Rios and Santos coffee have advanced and milds are advancing in sympathy. New packed lobsters have arrived on the market and are quoted at higher prices. Canned tomatoes are ruling firm. There is a steady demand for canned fruits. Dried apricots and peaches are practically cleaned up and the local market is bare. Raisins are ruling firm. Rolled oats are slightly easier. There is an active demand for corn-flakes and the lighter breakfast foods. Beans are higher and indications are that prices will be maintained. Jams which are offered at snap prices are finding ready sales. The almond market in Spain has been strengthened due to the report of damage by frost to the crop. Southern and Oriental rice markets are ruling firm. The spice market is ruling steady with some lines higher.

COFFEE MARKET ADVANCING

Winnipeg.

COFFEE.—Reports from primary markets state that coffee in the past six weeks has advanced 3c. per lb. on Rios and Santos and milds are advancing in sympathy. Locally there is an improvement in the demand but quotations show no change.

NEW PRICES ON LOBSTERS

Winnipeg.

CANNED GOODS.—New prices have been named on the winter pack of lobsters. Quarters are quoted at $2.85 per doz. and halves at $4.95. Due to rough weather on the Atlantic Coast the winter pack is very light. Indications point to the 1922 summer pack lobsters, to be slightly under the above quotations. Canned tomatoes are ruling firm and some lots which have been offered would cost the retailer about $4.15 per case. The same condition prevails on corn and peas. There is a steady demand for canned fruits with no change in quotations.

DRIED FRUITS FIRM

Winnipeg.

DRIED FRUITS.—There had been a slight easing in the primary markets on prunes. This may be temporary as indications point to prunes maintaining their present prices. Apricots are cleaned up in California and spot stocks locally are light. Peaches are in the same position with the market ruling firm and comparatively small stocks locally. Raisins are firm. The Raisin Association announce that they are entirely sold out of all desirable lines and are now devoting their attention to help the wholesaler get rid of present stocks with the view of having the market cleaned up before the new crop arrives. Currants are showing a firmer tone and are in good demand. Import quotations are about 3c. per lb. higher.

IS HE RIGHT IN BUYING THE SMALL LOT?

Jaw, Regina, Swift Current and Calgary —where the thermometer certainly gets down in winter—make conspicuous successes in this department.

Other suggestions are:

Reduction in wages expense. True, this amounted all told, inclusive of proprietor's "drawing account," to just short of 8.4 per cent. and so is not excessive for most localities; but these are times of curtailment and the locality of this business is not high priced generally, so I believe the level should be set for seven per cent., including the boss—and I feel it can be substantially attained. That would mean about $600 extra earnings on present ratio of business. I suggested a cut of his own salary to $125 per month as a beginning. The greater purchasing power of today's dollar will help all this.

Losses from bad debts are twice what they should be. That should be stopped —and it can be by good management. A merchant must learn to say no and mean it. No anxiety to increase business will justify credit laxity.

We all must remember that recent times have beene stressful—if not actually distressful—and that the man who got through without serious loss must congratulate himself, but now is the time to pick up the tangled threads and resume on a solid basis.

Man Himself Basically Sound

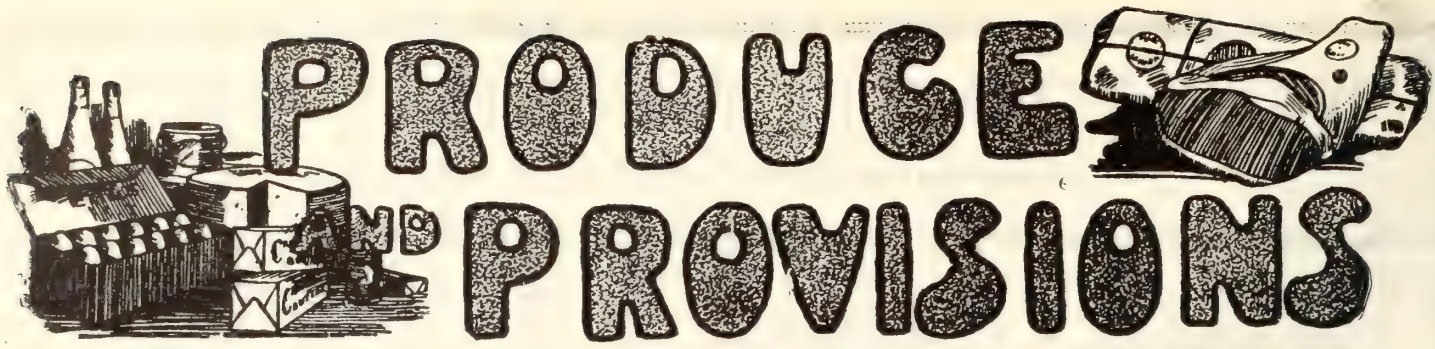
In conclusion I wrote him thus:

"I think that, considered altogether, you are on about the right track. Experience is a dear teacher but a very efficient one and you seem to have been through all the grades of her school. Also you seem to have profited thereby. It is a splendid sign that you have faced unflinchingly the 20 per cent. depreciation in stock and I am inclined to think you have followed the market downward with all declines. That is good business. It teaches a man to know the worst from the start, and it should be a good deal of comfort to you to know that many a good merchant lost money during the past year, so that to have played even is a good showing."

Perhaps a good closing thought is the following: that, having learned that market values must always rule on the down-grade, a man will see that they rule also on the up-turn. He will take his advances as well as his declines—always and immediately when they are due.

"It's a poor rule that does not work both ways."

Grocery stock was burned when fire visted the store of Joseph Choquette at 28-34 Craig Street, Montreal. The amount of damage to stock in the basement is unknown, but considerable stock was ruined.



Proposed Legislation Will Regulate Sale and Inspection of Root Vegetables

Measure Will Provide for Certain Grade Requirements, Marking of Potatoes and Onions, Containers, Etc.—Grocers Favor Proposal to Sell Root Vegetables by Weight

OTTAWA, April 11. (Special.) — One important piece of legislation to be dealt with during the present session of Parliament, and which will be carefully watched by retail grocers throughout the Dominion, is the proposed Act to Regulate the Sale and Inspection of Root Vegetables.

This measure introduces grade requirements, and provides for the marking of potatoes and onions, the branding of same, deals with the right of inspectors to examine, and imposes penalties for offences.

Bag Must Be Marked

Dealing with the marking of potatoes, the Act provides that where they are sold by the bag to the public, the bag must be marked in a plain and indelible manner, with a suitable tag, before it is taken from the premises where it is packed. This section was discussed at a recent meeting of the Advisory Committee of the Grocers' Section of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, and it was their opinion that this would be a protection to the retail grocer, but would likely increase the cost of potatoes to the consumer. The committee wished to know if when a grocer dumps the potatoes into a bin, when he sells a bag full, must he tag it with his own name and therefore become responsible. The information secured from the department of agriculture was that if he rebagged the potatoes he would have to place his own name on the tag.

Designates Size of Potatoes

Section 2 (b) of the proposed Act provides "that no person shall sell or offer for sale any potatoes upon which are marked any designation of grade representing such potatoes to be of Canada B quality unless they consist of reasonably mature stock of similar varietal characteristics, which are practically free from dirt or other foreign matter, frost injury and soft rot, and which are free from serious damage caused by sunburn, cuts, scab, blight, dry rot or other disease, insects or mechanical or other means.

These potatoes are not to be less than one and one half inches in diameter.

Reading this section, the grocer will naturally ask: "Can potatoes be imported into Canada of any grade or size?" The answer is yes, as the above requirements will only apply to Canadian grown stock.

Would Be Merchant's Loss

Discussing the right of an inspector to examine a carload of potatoes, at the meeting of the Advisory Committee of the Grocers' section, it was pointed out that if a retail merchant bought a carload of potatoes in, say, New Brunswick, and it arrived in the month of October or November and an inspector had occasion to inspect that car, he might hold it up on the tracks for three or four days. A frost might come in the meantime and the potatoes would be frozen. This would be entirely the merchant's loss, and the potatoes may have been quite sound when the inspector first held them up. This point was brought to the attention of the department, which replied that only one case of this kind had occurred in fifteen years.

Vegetables By Weight

Dealing with onions, provision is made for marking them when sold in crates.

The question was raised by the grocers whether or not it would be necessary when putting up a gallon or half a gallon to observe this rule. The department replied in the negative.

The committee went on record as being in agreement with section 16, which provides for the sale of all potatoes, onions, artichokes, beets, carrots, parsnips and turnips, by weight. They even go further and suggest that "or any fraction of weight," should be added.

IMPORTS FROM JAMAICA

A report from Kingston, Jamaica, states that in the past nine months, as compared with the corresponding period of the year previous, Canadian imports of Jamaican hides and skins and spices doubled; imports of cocoanut, raw cocoa and coffee trebled; grapefruit quadrupled, and vegetable oils increased by fourteen times their previous bulk. Shipments of raw sugar from this colony increased. These figures cover the first period during which the Canada-West Indies trade agreement of 1920 was operative.

Produce, Provision and Fish Markets

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, April 19—The feature of the produce market is the lower prices on butter with a weak market developing. This change is merely reactionary and may be expected to change as soon as the movement shows an improvement. Eggs are firm in price but lower quotations may be expected before the close of the month. Hogs have strengthened with an advance. There is no change in smoked or cured meats but the demand is good and shows a better movement than a year ago. Lard prices are steady. The cheese market is dull and weak in sympathy with butter but wholesale prices are not changed. The fish market is quiet but some improvement may be expected now that Easter season is over. The only feature is the arrival of lake and river fish which offers a variety for the retail fish dealer. Brook trout are on the market but prices are high, the season having opened earlier than usual this year.

BUTTER PRICES LOWER

Montreal.

BUTTER—The feature of the butter market has been a weaker feeling with prices quoted from three to four cents lower than last week on account of a bigger production and only a fair demand. Sales of select creamery butter were made at 37c at the beginning of the week with a tendency toward still lower prices.

CHEESE MARKET QUIET

Montreal.

CHEESE—The cheese market shows weakness in sympathy with butter while the demand for domestic and export trade is quiet and the new make is increasing in quantity. It is expected however that the interest in cheese will develop as the season progresses and a firmer tone will be evident with a better movement for export.

EGGS LIKELY TO GO LOWER

Montreal.

EGGS—In spite of the large supplies of fresh eggs arriving on the market prices are holding steady with a firm tone due to the big demand for consumption and the quantities that are now going into storage. The demand during the holiday season was particularly heavy but prices have not advanced. There is a feeling in the market that within the week lower prices will be quoted on eggs since the consumption usually is lessened after the Easter holidays. Export markets also show a weaker tone and there is little hope of any movement in that direction.

ADVANCE IN HOG PRICES

Montreal.

FRESH MEATS—The Easter season brought a stronger tone to hogs with an advance of 25c per cwt. on select light weights, making the price $14.50 per cwt. weighed off cars. The bigger demand for smoked, cured and fresh pork has strengthened the hog situation and while the offerings are just fair the present firm position may be expected to hold. There is no change in the market for beef. The supply of beef cattle, while not large, is ample to meet requirements and the close of Lent brought little change as far as prices are concerned.

SOLVING THE LATE ORDER PROBLEM

Sunday. We have no system in the store that I like better."

Notice To Customers

Another Montreal provisioner, J. Levesque, proprietor of Levesque's Market, 388 Victoria Ave., has another idea in order to get orders in early. A large sign across one of the walls reads—"We clerks are posting this hoping that customers will work in co-operation with us for their own benefit as well as ours. Please place your orders as early as possible. Our deliveries are 8 a.m., 10 a.m., 12 a.m., 3 p.m. and 5 p.m. Thanking you, signed, The Clerks." Another sign on the opposite wall reads, "Thanking you in advance for whatever service you will render by ordering as early as possible, signed, The Clerks." These polite suggestions help this store to get their deliveries out on time and so increase their service to their customers.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, April 19—The hog market is more or less unsettled, conditions changing almost daily depending upon receipts. Butter and cheese have an easier tone and a break in these markets is expected within the next week or ten days. Eggs are an uncertain element at the present time, as production is not yet considered to be at the peak. Storage operations have commenced in earnest and any surplus of eggs are going into storage. Lard is holding steady but shortening has an easy undertone. In some quarters quotations on cooked hams are lower while others are inclined to hold prices, claiming that hams will be scarce later in the season and are therefore putting into storage any surplus hams. Smoked meats are steady. Fish and poultry are unchanged.

BUTTER MARKET EASIER

Toronto.

BUTTER.—There is an easier feeling in the butter market with dealers' quotations to the retail trade reduced one cent per pound, making No. 1 creamery prints 43c to 44c with second grades around 42c per lb. The Ontario make is slowly increasing and many of the cheese factories which are equipped for the making of butter are expected to continue to make butter rather than cheese for some time. This factor no doubt will hasten the break which is being looked for almost daily. Dealers are not buying heavily, purchasing according to requirements.

UNCERTAINTY IN EGGS

Toronto

EGGS.—There has been a heavy consumption of eggs during the past week but as production is not yet at the peak there is rather an uncertain tone to the market. Storage operations have commenced in earnest and probably the next two weeks will see a heavy movement into storage. At the present time nothing definite can be forecast as from now on, or at least until storage operations cease, the condition of the market will depend mostly upon production. Quotations remained unchanged at 31c to 32c per doz.

COOKED HAMS SLIGHTLY LOWER

Toronto.

COOKED MEATS.—Sentiment in cooked meats is rather mixed at the moment. Some packers are inclined to shade prices on cooked hams while others are not overly anxious to reduce prices claiming that hams will be scarce later on when the summer demand is on, and any surplus of hams is going into storage for that purpose. Quotations on ordinary round trimmed boiled hams range from 44c to 48c and on square pressed, 47c to 50c per lb.

HOGS UNSETTLED

Toronto.

FRESH MEATS.—The hog market continues with an unsettled tone. As we went to press last week the market had a firmer feeling owing to light receipts but later in the week, prices again dropped under heavier shipments. The condition of the market appears to depend upon receipts; if more hogs arrive than can be readily absorbed the big packers are able to put into effect lower prices but on the other hand any curtailment in shipments, values go up. As we go to press the market is easy at $13.50 to $13.75 on the fed and watered basis. The big percentage of calves arriving continue to be of poor quality and consequently values in this section of the market were lower. Cattle and lambs held firm during the week.

EGGS.—The feature of the egg market is the firmer tone that has developed, due to the bad conditions of the roads making receipts very light. Case counts are quoted at 26c, candled at 27c and cartons at 30c per doz.

HOG MARKET STEADY

Winnipeg.

FRESH MEATS.—The hog market has shown an advance and live selected hogs are quoted at $12.50. The cattle market is active and with the limited offerings ready sales have been made. Good steers are quoted at $5.50 to $6.50. Few heifers are offered at prices from $5 to $6. There is very little demand for sheep and lambs as the few that are arriving are of poor quality.

THIS NOVEL SCHEME IS SAID TO HAVE BEEN WORTH WHILE

C. E. Sabbague, a sales promoter who has conducted many sales for retail stores in the vicinity of Lewiston, Me., just staged a rather sensational sale of his own, in which he drew public attention by advertising to pay boys 25 cents each for cats. The cats began to come in. People who lost cats began to complain. The reporters of the daily papers gave the matter news column publicity, and then the agent for the humane society was urged through numerous channels to investigate. His reports showed that Mr. Sabbague was treating the cats well, cats that had been stolen or had strayed away from their homes were promptly returned to owners. He was permitted to continue the cat collection to the end of the week, on promise of good "cat behavior" and of keeping a record of purchases of cats. To purchasers at his store on the final Saturday he gave away cats as long as the supply lasted. Mr. Sabbague reports the stunt an advertising success.

What is the best investment—the busy business corner or the lot in the suburbs?

Real estate men know that every city, town and village has its most valuable business locations.

Demand for the location; ready money for mortgage if necessary; ready salability—combine to make these prominent plots the safest investment.

The wide-awake grocer knows that similar elements govern the true value of branded food products.

The every day demand by the public for POSTUM CEREAL, INSTANT POSTUM, GRAPE-NUTS and POST TOASTIES, the fact that these four food products represent "ready money" and are commercially noted for their quick turnover, combine to make each brand A LEADER IN ITS LINE.

The peculiar success of POSTUM CEREAL, INSTANT POSTUM, GRAPE-NUTS and POST TOASTIES is not accidental. "There's a Reason."

Persistent and truthful advertising messages throughout the year, and EVERY year since these popular food products were offered to the public, is as much a part of the business policy of the Postum Cereal Company as its desire to serve the public the "best there is" in the brands it manufactures.

What can any grocer demand more than this: Quality, assured and reasonable profits, and a guaranteed turnover?

ROSE BRAND

When Stores Had No Street Numbers

Before street-numbers came into being, a merchant was known by the sign under which he traded. And even to-day, though there is a number over your door, people are apt to identify your store by a sign—because signs are so easily remembered. Wherever meats and farm produce are sold, the sign of the Rose is recognized as the means of distinguishing a high-quality product. Surely it is to your advantage to identify your store with a name so high in repute as Rose Brand—the name that has stood for many years as an assurance of the very highest quality and value.

THE "WANT" AD.

The "want ad." has grown from a little used force in business life into one of the great necessities of the present day.

Business men nowadays turn to the "want ad." as a matter of course for a hundred small services.

The "want ad." gets work for workers and workers for work.

It gets clerks for employers and finds employers for clerks. It brings together buyer and seller, and enables them to do business though they may be thousands of miles apart.

The "want ad." is the great force in the small affairs and incidents of daily life.

Meet This Competition

AT BEST you sell but a small proportion of the fruit used for marmalade making in the home.

—The bulk of the fruit is sold by fruit stores and there is little profit for you on the sale of sugar.

Do you realize that these special fruit sellers are in direct competition with your sales of manufactured marmalade?

Your selling strategy is to concentrate your emphasis on Shirriff's Marmalade.

—Shirriff's the household favorite for seventeen years—therefore your best seller in the marmalade line.

Experiment has proved the fact that it is cheaper for the housewife to buy Shirriff's from you than to make her own.

The more you emphasize Shirriff's the less will be made in the home and the more you will sell.

Do your customers a real service by pointing out to them that it is cheaper to buy Shirriff's and you will deserve and actually enjoy better profits than you ever could hope for from the selling of fruit for home made marmalade.

Handsome display cards sent you on request.

You Can Increase Your Tea Sales

There are few things that a customer is more fastidious about than tea. She likes to be able to rely on a certain brand all the time. Change in quality annoys her and may mean the loss of a customer for you. The consistency of our blends is what builds up your tea trade. You can sell our blends in bulk under your own name, which means more prestige for your store.

HIAWATHA

The name "Hiawatha" on a tin of apples means it contains only sound, selected fruit from the great orchards of Nova Scotia. We take special care in packing. This is indicated by the favor Hiawatha Brand gallon apples have met with in the critical Old Country market.

Pure Cider Vinegar

The same careful attention is given the manufacture of our high standard Pure Cider Vinegar. No fruit that has a blemish is used—only clean, sound apples are permitted to go through the cider mill. These two products will be found good money-makers by the Canadian grocery trade.

How He Got His Man

A merchant in Montreal wanted a man to manage his store. He advertised in the daily papers and secured many replies. He also used an announcement in the Want Ad. page of CANADIAN GROCER and several replies were received. He chose his man from the latter. In fact, the only men who at all suited his purpose, were those who applied through this paper.

CANADIAN GROCER reaches business men in the trade. There are good men scattered all over Canada who read the CANADIAN GROCER and who are interested in such a proposition.

To get the man you want; to secure a position; a partner, to sell some used equipment; to buy second-hand equipment, use the Want Ad page of CANADIAN GROCER. It gets results.

Montreal Wholesale Grocers Disband?

Recent Trouble Over the Question of "Price Cutting" is Said to Have Brought About Present Reported State of Disorganization —President Couvrette Says Jurisdiction of Guild is Suspended

MONTREAL, April 26—(Special)—The Montreal Wholesale Grocers' Guild is in a state of disorganization. It is asserted by some that it has disbanded and as a Guild does not now exist. On the other hand it is claimed by officials in the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association that the Montreal organization has not disbanded, and that the difficulties that have confronted it, and that have brought about the alleged "break-up," are being straightened out. The last circular sent out by the secretary of the Montreal Wholesale Grocers' Guild announces to the members that prices on listed grocery lines would in future be set by the individual wholesale houses. E. Couvrette, the president, is himself the authority for the statement that the jurisdiction of the Guild is suspended, but that meetings are being held in consultation with Dominion officers for the purpose of discussing the present crisis.

Go-As-You-Please Policy

The outcome is a go-as-you-please policy in the grocery trade. Prices have been slashed without regard to cost during the past two weeks, without any restrictions and little attention to the true condition of markets. One wholesale grocer said to Canadian Grocer representative, "For some time back the wholesale trade has been menaced with price-cutting by those who would not adhere to the agreements of the Wholesale Grocers' Guild. Now we are going to slash these prices to such an extent that those who began it will not be able to follow. We intend to teach them a lesson."

Who Are "Them?"

Just who was referred to by "them," it is hard to say for in recent months, yes in the past two years, nearly all the wholesale grocery houses in this city have played a part in the price cutting game. In one way and another the practice has kept up despite the Guild. Sugar and soap have been the instruments most frequently used and to-day in the Province of Quebec the grocery trade is at sea as to the price of soaps. One wholesale grocer in speaking of the break-up stated that the question that had precipitated the present disorganization was the failure of some of the local houses to live up to the agreement on discounts for cash. He explained that there had been an understanding among the wholesale grocers in the Guild that the only discount that should be allowed was one per cent. for cash (i.e. demand drafts) and that one wholesale grocery house, represented in the guild, was found to be extending the discount to thirty days. This added to the strife over sugar prices that led to the general disavowal of all the by-laws of the Wholesale Grocers' Guild in Montreal.

Guild Virtually Gone

E. Couvrette, president of the Wholesale Grocers' Guild of Montreal, in speaking to a Canadian Grocer representative about the present state of affairs, said: "As far as I can see, since all that the Wholesale Grocers' Guild has stood for in the past has been disregarded, the whole Guild must also be a thing of the past. All the regulations have been broken, and for my part I cannot see that it now stands for anything. I am seriously considering handing in my resignation but perhaps even that is unnecessary. I am sorry to see it go. To me it seems that the happenings of the past few weeks have only opened the door to trouble, not only for the wholesale grocers but for the retailers also. It seems doubtful whether or not it can or will be revived. Some wholesalers don't want it. Others are not particular."

No Fixed Prices

It now seems that in the Province of Quebec prices on all the stable grocery lines are an unknown quantity. One wholesaler stated that his travellers were sent on the road this week with instructions to meet all competition in prices. Such is the present condition of affairs in the grocery trade in Montreal.

Finds Customers Are Asking for Apples by the Brand Name

Montreal Grocer Thinks People Have Been Fooled Too Often by a Rosy Skinned Apple That When They Find a Good One They Want a Way to Identify it

MONTREAL.—Even apples are branded these days. Potatoes may be next, but the important fact is that the public will ask for even apples by a brand name. One Montreal grocer, Alex. Davidson, of 4907 Sherbrooke St. West, told Canadian Grocer the following story which illustrated the point and shows why people ask for apples by a name given them by the packers.

"During the last year I have found, much to my surprise, that people will ask for apples by a brand name," said Mr. Davidson. "The reason I give, is that people have been fooled so much lately by a rosy and solid skin to some apples while the fruit is tasteless, that when they do find a good apple they want some way to identify it so that they can be sure of getting the same quality the next time. Naturally when that apple has a brand name, they are going to remember the name and ask for it in the future, or just as long as the quality of barrelled apples is so poor and the prices so high. It is too bad that such should be the case but too long the domestic market has been neglected.

The Prestige of Advertising

"Another thing that I believe helps the sale of branded apples, or in fact other branded lines, is the fact that people consider that a well advertised product has just a little better quality than the unidentified goods. Perhaps they do not know why they think that, but back of it is a very sound reason, which is illustrated in the case of apples. Suppose that a lady buys some of a certain brand of apples to-day and on trying them finds that they are no good and brings them back to-morrow, saying that she does not want any more of them. In the future she can guard against them because they are branded. On the other hand if they are good she can always get them for the same reason. The customer knows that, before she makes the purchase. She also knows that the producer is not going to stake his reputation, his success and all the money that is represented by the advertising of the brand that has come to her attention, unless he is sure that he is giving the best quality available.

"It is evident that in such a branded line the customers have a protection and on account of the protection they have more confidence in the line. The result, that I have seen, is that those who have once bought the branded apples make their second purchase by the brand name. Perhaps this is partly accounted for by the fact that I have let my customers know that these apples are branded and I tell them the name when they make their first purchase because it helps make the sale, particularly when I explain that the fact that the apples are branded is an assurance that they are good."

Report Not General

Yet another grocer who handles the same apples told a Canadian Grocer representative that he had never had an enquiry for apples by name. He said further that people would not buy apples by brand. It was an outrage to expect such a thing. However upon enquiry Canadian Grocer found that this grocer did not sell one-half the quantity of apples that the first grocer did. The box containing the apples was tilted up in the window so that the label could not be seen and the merchant had to pull the box out to find out for himself what the name of the brand was. He had not realized the opportunity afforded him by the advertising of these apples. In fact he had thrown away the tickets which bore the name of the brand and the price which come with every box. His sole contention was that "apples is apples."

France Shows Big Increase Biscuit Exports

Montreal.—Commerce Reports, published by the United States Department of Commerce, give figures that show a striking increase in the manufacture of biscuits in France. In the year 1862 at Talence, France, the first small cake and biscuit factory was founded. Since that time the industry has extended to all parts of the country. In 1889, the manufacture of biscuits and cakes showed a marked increase which developed until the war but the surprising thing is that since the war the manufacture of biscuits has almost doubled that of pre-war times, in metric tons and in exports, more than ten times the value of what it did in 1913. The industry was, of course, somewhat disorganized during the war but it has regained, and even surpassed, its pre-war importance. During the first half of 1921 the Government restricted the factories in their supply of flour and consequently the production was somewhat limited but during the latter part of the year the production showed a big increase. An other point of interest is that the value of the exportations of biscuits shows a bigger proportionate increase than metric tons, which would indicate that the quality of biscuits produced is much better and demands a bigger price on foreign markets. A comparison of figures for 1913 shows that the exports in that year exceeded the imports by 1,168 metric tons in volume. In 1920 although factories lacked a full supply of raw materials, the exports exceeded the imports by 3,146 metric tons with an increase in the value of the exportations by 26,730,000 francs. This speaks well for the biscuit manufacturing industry in France and shows a marked decrease in the imports of such lines.

NETHERLANDS SPICE SHIPMENTS TO U. S.

The United States was the best foreign customer of the Dutch spice dealers during 1921. The declared exports of spices, particularly pepper, nutmeg, mace, and cloves, from this country to the United States for the year were valued at $479,200 as compared with $284,600 in 1920.

THE WEEKLY HALF HOLIDAY

IN many cities, towns and villages throughout the Dominion, merchants will be closing one afternoon each week and as in other years Canadian Grocer will again publish a list of the municipalities wherein there is a half holiday each week. It is important that this list be accurate and that every locality be represented as business houses have found this list a valuable one in assisting them to plan the trips of their representatives.

We therefore request merchants to fill in this coupon and return at their earliest convenience.

"Why Should Government Interfere?"

"For the Life of Me I Cannot Quite Understand the Thinking of People in This Country Who, for the Sake of Imaginary Help to a Few Employed in a Certain Industry, Would Prevent Thousands of Others from Buying Margarine," Says Michael Clark, of Red Deer

THERE is no desire on the part of the producers and importers of oleomargarine to have it pose as a food product, it is not in fact. It is rather an aid in supplying the needs of mankind for palatable fats. As the combined consumption of oleomargarine and butter in most countries is below what dietitians consider to be the necessary quantity of fats, it cannot be held that these two commodities encroach on each other.

Statistics show that the demand for oleomargarine has increased without decreasing the output of butter. Oleomargarine will undoubtedly continue to increase in popularity and consumption because it is a food that of its own intrinsic worth and merit will steadily establish it in the homes of Canada.

It need not only be repeated that oleomargarine manufacturers place their product on the market under the most rigid sanitary regulations and that it is sold strictly on its merits.

Has Increased Value of Cattle

The main ingredients of oleomargarine come from animal fats and the use of these parts of the carcass has increased the value of cattle to the livestock producer. Take beef fats for example: Formerly these fats all went into tallow production. Now the edible fats are rendered into oleo oil in both America and Europe and used in oleomargarine manufacture. The average beef animal yields about 40 pounds of fats, from which is separated about 16 pounds of oleo oil and about 9 pounds of stearine, the remainder being fat too hard for the making of oleomargarine. The products of fats in this form are worth almost double that of their value under methods used prior to utilization in oleomargarine manufacture. This difference is clearly reflected in the selling price of cattle.

Napoleon's Prize for Butter Substitute

The beginning of oleomargarine is interesting. During the siege of Paris in the Franco-Prussian War, in 1870-71 when the starving French people were looking for food, Napoleon III offered a prize to the person who would produce the best substitute for butter. The prize was won by Hippolyte Mege, a French chemist, who presented to the French Emperor a batch of oleomargarine which he had made by churning skimmed milk and beef fat.

Since then oleomargarine has become a staple article of diet. Its sale received a tremendous impetus during the Great War. Millions of persons in Canada and United States, who before had never used it, served it for the first time on their tables. Consumers became familiarized with the wholesome nature of the product and its economy. In Canada something like 1,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine a month are sold to a population of about 8,700,000.

Consumers are already apprehending the possibility that the Canadian Government may forbid the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine from September next. They see that the restoration of the former regulation on oleomargarine would add to the household bills.

Found on the Best Tables

In Canada oleomargarine is found on the best tables. There is no deception about its use. It is sold in packages plainly marked, and it is regarded as just as legitimate a product as peanut butter or honey. It always has been popular in Great Britain, where the annual amount consumed is about nine pounds per capita, and in the United States it is only slightly less.

In addition, an immense amount of milk is used in oleomargarine manufacture. As there is a great demand for all the good butter that can be made, there is no question that the sale of oleomargarine in Canada will prove a benefit to the farmer as well as to the consumer, especially of the small wage earning families.

One of the clearest statements of the cause for oleomargarine and one of the strongest reasons for its unfettered use and sale was made in Parliament last session by the Hon. W. S. Fielding, who is now Minister of Finance. His remarks may be summarized from Hansard:

"The real question in this matter is this: Is oleomargarine a legitimate article of commerce? That is the whole question. If it is not a legitimate article of commerce let us bar it out. If it is a legitimate article of commerce, why should we interfere with it at all? The question is: Is this a legitimate article of commerce? The whole world outside of Canada answers that question: Yes, it is a legitimate aritcle of commerce. Every country in the world except Canada recognized that it is a legitimate article of commerce. But are we going to decide in Canada, against the judgment of the whole world, that it is not a legitimate article of trade? It seems to me that that is not a position that can be maintained at all. I cannot believe that there is any danger to the dairy industry from the sale of oleomargarine."

A Wholesome Article of Food

Dr. Michael Clark, then the member for Red Deer, put the matter breezily in the following words:

"For the life of me I cannot quite understand the thinking of people in this great, free, democratic country of Canada, who say for the sake of imaginary help to a few people engaged in certain industry, the teeming population of Hamilton, Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver, and Winnipeg, should be prevented from buying oleo if they want to buy it.

"The output of dairy products has increased during the period in which the manufacture and importation of oleomargarine has been permitted. We find that in such countries as Denmark, which depends for its prosperity upon the production of butter, the people consume no less than forty-four pounds of oleomargarine per head per year. Oleomargarine has been recognized as a very wholesome article of food all over the world and Canada is the only country at the present time that has any restrictions on its manufacture, importation or sale."

Has No Right to Interfere

W. D. Euler, of North Waterloo, said:

"I do not see that this House has any right to interfere with the choice of the individual with regard to its purchase. There is entirely too much interference with personal liberty at present. If the housewife desires to use oleomargarine, that is her right. We have in our cities a great deal of unemployment. You can imagine a man in one of the cities who works, perhaps, three days a week. He has to make the little bit of money he earns reach just as far as he possibly can. He goes into a store and asks for oleomargarine. He knows what he is doing; he knows what he wants; he is satisfied to get oleomargarine because he can buy it a little cheaper than butter, and he tells the storekeeper that he wants oleomargarine. Who has the right to say to him that he shall not be allowed to buy oleomargarine because somebody wants to force him to buy butter? That position is absolutely unreasonable and untenable."

A French-Canadian, P. R. DuTremblay, (Laurier-Outremont) said:

"The only objection I have to the legislation before the House is that it is not to be permanent. I do not see why we should prevent the sale of this article which, I understand, is subjected to the inspection of an officer appointed by the Government. A large number of people in the cities and towns, rich and poor alike, use oleomargarine. I do not think the Government has any right to limit its sale to a period of only one year. The very fact that they allow its sale at all is recognition that the food is good, and if oleomargarine has good food value—it should not be kept out of the market."

Advertising Will Help Service Store

Always a Place for the Retailer Who Gives a Good Service and Who Tells the Public About His Goods—Keen Rivalry Developing Among Chains Represented From The Fourth Estate, New York.

WHAT effect will the phenomenal growth of the chain store have on the wholesale and retail advertising of food products?

There is a question that the keen salesman of advertising is going to follow closely during the next year. The expansion of the chain store which may be taken as fairly representative of the growth in other centres of population, in New York, indicates that before long at least a mild re-organization of food distribution must be effected. Individual retailers and many wholesalers are admittedly concerned over the future of their function as instruments of distribution.

Students of newspaper advertising will need no more in the way of admonition to watch this development than the counsel of Richard S. Wood, manager of the food department of the New York Evening Mail, who points out in a communication to The Fourth Estate, that unless the individual retailer and the wholesaler get together to work out some remedial measures, the chances of many of them for surviving are slim indeed.

One of the possibilities is that the individual retail grocer will have to burst forth from his traditional shell and advertise to justify his right to do business. He has many legitimate reasons for existing side by side with the chain store despite the fact that the latter will "cut" his prices to the bone. The individual retailer has personal service to sell, in the way of delivery, charge accounts, and manifold other accommodations which the chain store cannot provide, by reason of its comparatively "nickel-in-the-slot" character.

Wholesalers may open retail outlets of their own. In that case, how will they tackle the advertising problem? It looks like newspapers, of course. Then the chains themselves will probably have a good story of distributive economies to tell and again the newspaper is the place for that. How the cat will jump is, of course, a matter for the grocery trade itself to work out, but it is distinctly a part of the newspaper man's business to keep close tabs on that jump.

Always Place For Service

"The chain store business has grown with great rapidity," says Mr. Wood, in a recent article in the Mail. "At the present time it is conceded that these stores do approximately fifty per cent. of the retail grocery business of the Metropolitan district and the end is not in sight, for several of the systems are scouring both the city and nearby suburbs for new locations.

"There will always be a place for the independent retailer who gives personal attention to customers and who accommodates them by delivery and credit service. The merchants conducting their business along these lines are being rapidly reduced, but the fear that they will all be wiped out is unfounded. Many persons want the extra service which such merchants can give and they are willing to pay for it.

"It must not be understood that the chain stores are making any concerted effort against either the independent retailer or the wholesaler. Up to a comparatively short time ago, going was pretty easy for the few chain stores then in existence.

"With the development of the chain store idea, more and more systems have come into existence and competition has developed, until now it has reached a real struggle for supremacy. This has become so intense that all cannot survive. In the near future a number of the smaller chain store systems may for their own protection join a combination backed by considerable capital.

"One of the largest of chain store systems has for a year or two operated vegetable and fruit canning and preserving plants, and has but recently purchased fish canning plants on the Pacific coast capable of producing more than 200,000 cases of canned salmon per annum. This is merely a suggestion as to the changes under which the food merchandising industry of this country may go during the coming few years."

PHILADELPHIA RETAILERS MAKE UP LIST OF 30,000 DEAD-BEATS

Will be Ready in Plenty of Time for Erection of Booths

Toronto, (Special).—A number of meetings of a special committee of the Food Products Association have been held recently to discuss with the architects of the new food building on the exhibition grounds, the construction of the booths. The last meeting was held on the grounds on Tuesday morning when J. G. Irving, vice-president of the exhibition and Mr. Chapman, architect of the new building, were present to answer questions and decide on uniformity in partitions, etc. The chairman of the Food Products' Association, H. N. Cowan, with several members of the executive was also present. The secretary is sending out letters to the exhibitors outlining matters of general importance in connection with the erection of booths.

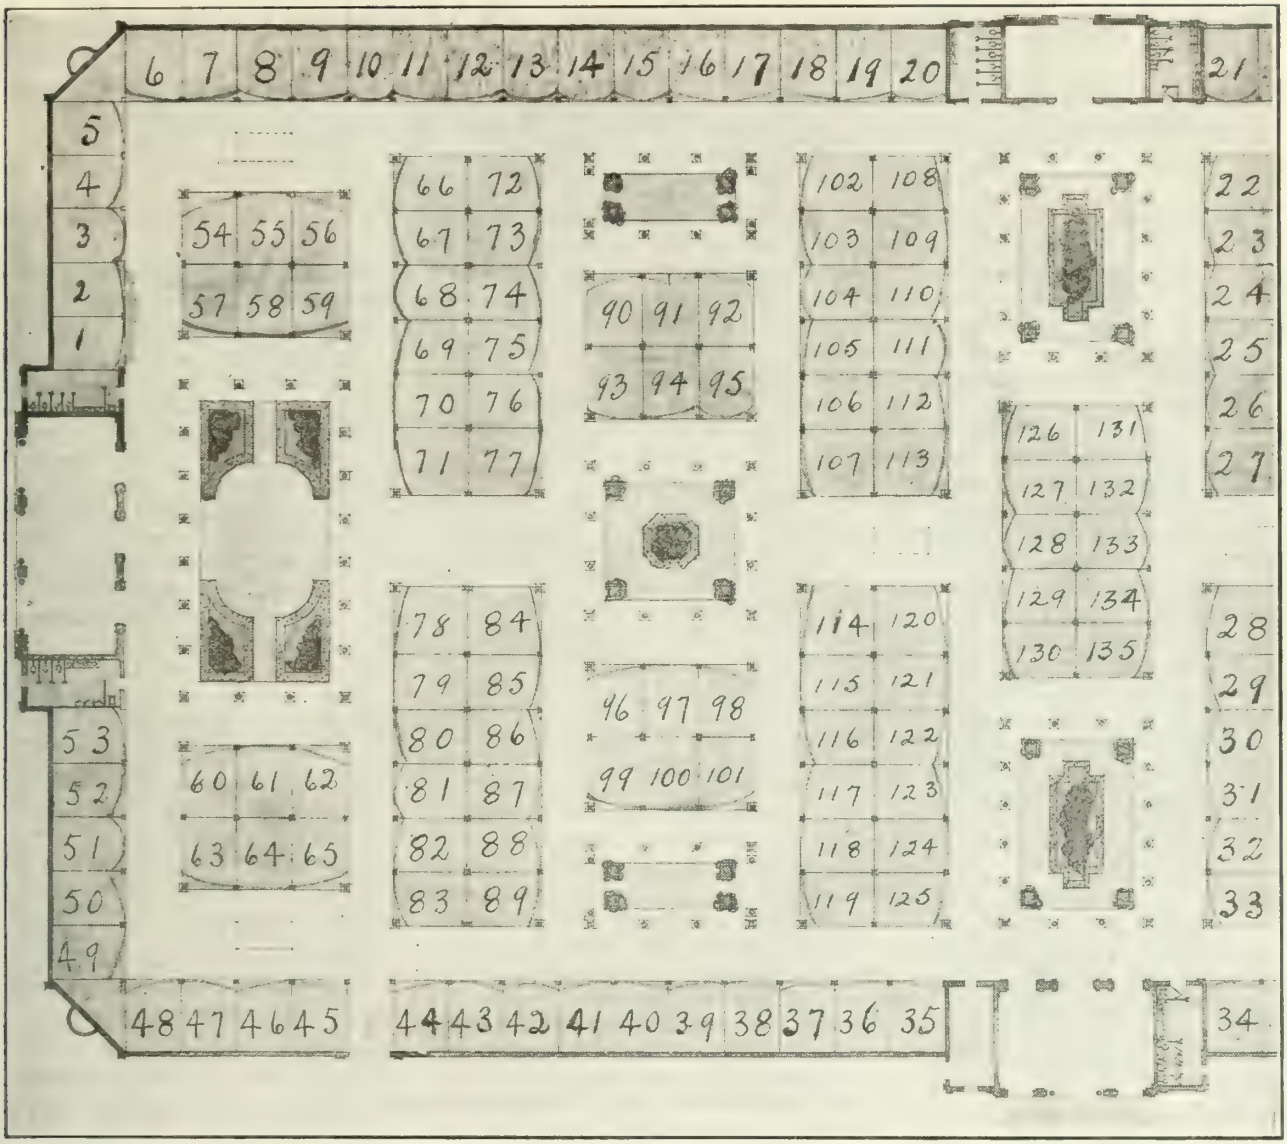
The walls of the new building are practically completed and the roof is being laid. The uprights for the booths have all been installed, as well as some of the pillars around the open air spaces. The building will be ready in good time for the construction of booths for this year's exhibition.

The Exhibition Board report that the space in the manufacturers' building vacated by the Food manufacturers has all been taken up.

Among those present at the meeting at the Exhibition grounds on Tuesday, were H. N. Cowan; W. G. Patrick; James Wagstaff; Charles T. Miller, T. H. Estabrooks Co.; Thomas Shortiss, Quaker Candy Co.; George W. Varty, Walter M. Lowney Co.; F. C. Copp, Gunns Limited; C. S. Anger, Heinz Co.; Mr. McGlashan, W. G. Patrick & Co.; Mr. Gregory and Mr. Dimmock of The Cowan Co.; Mr. Leach, T. H. Estabrooks Co.; Mr. Collins, Western Canada Flour Mills and A. H. Field, Christie, Brown Co. Representatives from the Exhibition Board included J. G. Irving, and Sam Harris, who will be superintendent of the new buildings.

No Change is Made in Man. Garnishment Act

No change was made in the Garnishment Act at the 1922 session of the Manitoba legislature by which the exemption would be increased from $40 per month to $100 per month. This bill was thrown out and the exemption remains at $40 per month. Some years ago the exemption was $25 per month. The Retail Merchants' Association is pleased to report that the attempt to increase the exemption was defeated. "The Garnishment Act would be rendered useless if the exemption were placed at the figure suggested by John Queen, M. L. A.," stated J. H .Curle, secretary, Manitoba Board, The Retail Merchants' Association.



Above is reproduction of the ground plan of the new Pure Food Building under course of erection on the C.N.E. grounds. Each exhibit space is 12 feet wide by 16 feet deep. There will be six open-air courtyards as shown in the plan. Main entrances are on the west and south with receiving entrance on the north.

Key to Space Allotments—Exhibit spaces are numbered from one up to 135, beginning at left of western entrance. Numbers run around outer walls first and finish in centre. Below are given names of exhibitors followed by number or numbers of spaces drawn for them:

Travellers Protest Against Tax

Delegation Has Been Going Carefully Into Government's Proposal to Put an Impost on Expenses—Travelling Representatives of Manufacturing, Wholesale and Retail Firms Are Affected

THE PROPOSED tax on expense allowances is not apparently going to be accepted by commercial travelers without a fight, for at the quarterly meeting of the Ontario Commercial Travelers' Association, held recently, a delegation was appointed to launch a strong protest with the Minister of Finance, Hon. W. S. Fielding. This delegation has been in Montreal attending the convention of delegates from all the Commercial Travellers' associations of Canada. The delegation is advocating that the Dominion association go on record as being opposed to the present tax regulations. That complaint of the association is that the new government's finance department has ruled that commercial travellers shall make a return of their expense allowances, together with a return of their salaries and bonuses. The government, however, allows the travelers to claim exemption for all their expenses except a nominal one dollar a day subsistence charge. Commercial travelers, it is pointed out do not object to the surtax or to the income tax for that matter. They realize that the national debt must be paid. What they object to is that the government is forcing them to consider expense allowances as salary for the purpose of assessing the surtax.

Travellers On Same Basis

In connection with 1921 returns now asked, it is prescribed that men who regularly travel, and whose expenses when traveling are paid by the firm for which they are employed, must add to their income for purposes of taxation, an amount representing one dollar for every day they are away and on which their living expenses are not paid by themselves. This obviously deals primarily with traveling salesmen but its influence is somewhat more extensive as has been found by investigation.

The idea of taxing a man on extra income when his living expenses are being met by the firm apart altogether from his salary, is an outcrop of income tax legislation in the United States where such "frills" have not been any too warmly received. The idea, according to Mr. Smith, head of the income tax department, is to place the traveler, whose living expenses are paid by his firm, on the same basis as the city traveler who pays his own living expenses and also on the same basis as the commission salesman who is allowed nothing or only a portion of his expenses by his firm.

As a matter of fact the new ruling was brought about largely as a result of complaints made by salesmen working on commission that their brother salesmen working on salary and expense allowance, had a big advantage under the plan originally proposed by the inland revenue department under which only railway fare was to be allowed to be deducted from income on statements made by commission salesmen.

Considered "A Bit Arbitrary"

It was not thought that salesmen allowed expenses by their firms were inclined to "pad" their bills and thus increase their income but that being allowed expense money was really an allowance "in lieu of living expenses."

It was suggested to officials of the income tax department that on this basis the family of a married salesman should be able to effect considerable saving in living expenses during his absence whereupon a number of them agreed that the absence of a man from home generally made very slight difference in the living expenses of his family.

"It is obviously a bit arbitrary," agreed one official, who appreciated that certain odd situations might arise under this ruling.

Questioned concerning the extension of this regulation to others than those commonly known as "commercial travelers," Mr. Smith pointed out that executives and other employees who made regular trips on business for which expenses were paid by the firm should rightly add a dollar a day to their income including moneys paid him for expenses. The same applied to representatives of certain retail firms who follow the practice of sending men out through the surrounding district at regular periods to stir up prospects for business or report on conditions, providing their expenses are paid by their firms.

How It Works Out

"Of course it is not intended to be very minute in its application," said Mr. Smith, "and we would only expect a return where the total number of days reported for the year was large enough to warrant noting."

He hinted that two days a week or one hundred days a year might be taken as a fair minimum.

In making returns covering this point the individual enumerates the approximate number of days he has been out in the year, taking into account half days, etc. He notes his gross income including moneys paid him for expenses and then deducts the amount of his expenses on which exemption is allowed. He can then merely note the number of days he was traveling and let the department make the necessary addition to his income or he can add a dollar for each day he was away himself, and make a note that the amount shown includes this figure so it will not be added twice. He also indicates what class of "traveler" he belongs to, as explained later.

His company in filing a statement of his income for checking purposes notes the gross amount paid and a separate figure showing the total amount of expense money paid to the man. The income tax department divides the figure of expense money paid by certain averages, thereby checking approximately the number of days shown on the traveler's personal statement.

Divided Into Three Classes

Travelers are divided into three classes for purposes of this ruling, as follows:
(a) Those who travel with grips only: (b) Those who travel with trunks containing samples weighing up to 1,000 lbs; (c) Those travelling with trunks containing samples weighing over 1,000 lbs.

The averages set by the department are, of course, not being proclaimed publicly but it is understood that the range from an allowance to those in (a) cate-

The proposal to increase the traveller's tax burden is not being looked upon with favor by the outside salesmen. An organized protest is being made.

Makes 6.4 per Cent on Sales in 1921

Figures of This Grocer's Business Show Expenses for 1921 at 14.29 Per Cent. Plus—Gross Margins Foot up to an Average of 20.69 Per Cent.—Analysis of an Interesting Statement

By HENRY JOHNSON, Jr.

ONE peculiarity I notice runs-through retailers' letters—that when they want to write competition they always invariably stutter and write "competion." Looks to me as if they were all sort of scared or so wrought up that they could not articulate. It is even so in the letter I publish now—though I correct it—a letter which evinces ample capacity on the part of the writer to take care of himself and his business, as I shall show. So maybe it's only a shadow—the "competion" that worries them. I think it is!

Pacific Coast Town, March 24, 1922.

Henry Johnson, Jr.

Care Canadian Grocer.

Dear Sir:—Please pardon me for bothering you with all the enclosed. I always read what you have to say and gets lots of good pointers therefrom. I think I have a good little business and want to tell you all about it. We have been here four years and have made a good living and a little on the side. We have plenty of competition all round us, but we sell as cheap as we can, deliver twice daily, run a Ford—and you will notice that the Ford costs some money to run at that, nearly a dollar a day—more too when you figure depreciation on the machine, but I think it pays my business to deliver. We sell lots of vegetables and fruits -- keep them right in the front window all the time and keep them fresh and clean at all times. Last summer the tomatoes were very poor and we threw out a good many. You will notice on the sheet how much we had to dump. We keep track of such spoilage from day to day in a little book for that purpose. By so doing we are allowed to take credit for it on our income sheet. Would like criticism and to have you tell us the profit we made, stock turnover, etc. We do not take a certain salary each month for self and wife, who helps me occasionally, Saturdays, etc. We charge grocery bill each month, same as anybody else. If I take ten dollars, I charge it in cash book. Whenever we want money we book it right then. If a personal bill of clothes, shoes or other things comes to be paid, we charge it to ourselves—absolutely, we do not miss charging a thing we take. I am particular about this. I discount everything and always have. I could pay them all off any time they wanted it.

Yours very truly

Very Favorable Showing

The figures show expenses for 1921 at 14.29% plus. Taking stock end of 1920, purchases during 1921 and stock end of 1921 as basis, the gross margins foot up to an average of 20.69% plus, showing net earnings of over 6.4% on sales. The net seems to total $3,498.61, so I feel that he is right in saying he makes a little "on the side."

There are many instructive things about this record. The small stock carried is remarkable. It is so small that turnover looks like nearly 10 times—17.8 plus, to be exact. It is not likely that this man felt any loss in the declining markets—he did not have stock enough to enable him to notice it. He sold out and bought again so frequently that very likely he was all sold out on each lot before the decline struck him. What a lesson that is in light stock carrying!

No definite account is taken of depreciation, interest and credit losses. But the item of "other expenses" is very liberal—enough to cover, I should say. Still, I would counsel definiteness here. It looks curious for a man to take all the pains indicated to keep track of $85 of spoilage in vegetables and let depreciation of probably not less than $150 on his Ford drop into miscellaneous expenses. But on the other hand, this is one slight indication of how the income tax has set merchants to digging into the facts of their business.

That expenses were over fourteen per cent. in 1921 against less than twelve in 1920 is partly accounted for by shrinkage in sales, but this can be watched this year a little closer by way of taking definite salaries for self and wife and cuttting corners in other expenses.

It will be well to read over this letter carefully to note how this man balances expenses against results—Ford costs a lot, but after all he thinks it pays, how he is mindful of depreciation, how he realizes and daily demonstrates that fresh things must be kept fresh looking, clean and attractive to be sold—I think I can see the wife's hand and brain in this!—how he has the habit of watching for small leaks, how he seeks criticism, how he watches every cent of outgo through hs own household—a direction in which most "accounting systems" decidedly fail to account. He is, in fact, "particular" about several things. He discounts every bill. One of the results of being thus particular is that he "could pay them all off any time they wanted it."

This merchant has not told me how much he had when he started, nor how much he has now, but that does not matter. He has told me enough to show me that he knows what he is doing, is a mighty careful man—helped, let it be noted, by a careful wife—and that he has formed a number of habits other merchants might copy to advantage. And while he indicates that "competion" surrounds him, he does not seem to be troubled with it beyond his capacity.

Problem in Inventory Taking

Here is another letter from the West: Canadian Grocer:—

Thank you;

Yours very truly,

Because I could not handle this man's letter at once, I wrote him pointing out that the bookkeeping did not matter so much as the proportion he owed on stock. In 1921 his debts were 50% of his stock inventory—a very dangerous condition. His condition was better the next January, for not only were his debts down two thirds, but they then constituted only 25% of his stock. I counselled

Many Ways to Speed up the Turnover

Merchants From One End of The Country to the Other Are Adopting Special Methods of Maintaining Business at Satisfactory Levels—The Consumer Will Buy Providing the Goods Can Be Obtained at the Proper Price

A subscriber writes asking for some suggestions on how other merchants are meeting present conditions by keeping up turn-over and in any other way. Canadian Grocer would be pleased to hear from readers with their views and experiences on this important subject and in the meantime we present the following for the attention of the inquirer. —The Editors.

OUR EXPERIENCES among retailers indicate that the consumer who has money will buy, providing he can get the goods at the proper price. Wm. Steeves, a grocer in St. John, New Brunswick, told one of our representatives recently that from one idea he was able to sell twenty-three cases of oranges in one week's time. In this particular instance the idea was the making of a bulk display of oranges in his window. He sold the fruit at a profit. Goods must be sold at a profit above cost and overhead or else they are not sold at all. They are given away. Stubbing & Son, Kitchener, recently sold $300 worth of out-of-season vegetables and fruits on a Saturday. These lines included such things as lettuce, tomatoes, spinach, cauliflower and rhubarb. Their method was to devote an entire window display to them for the week-end trade and use price tickets. They also have a small display of each line inside the store so that the customer that comes in cannot over-look them.

Fred Levesque, a Montreal retailer, sells between 1500 and 2000 pounds of halibut every week, in addition to several hundred pounds of other fish. This store devotes a display under glass inside to fish, so that customers must see it as they come in to purchase other lines. He buys the best fish he can and in just the quantity he knows he can sell. He displays this attractively and he advertises it and talks about his fish to customers buying other lines. He knows the various kinds of fish. He regulates his purchases so that they will be just a little bit over the quantity he sold the previous week and then gets behind sales and clears it out.

Knowing the Customers

George O. Werrett of Simcoe, Ontario, knows his customers. He has a map of the town with the streets all outlined on it and the houses numbered. He makes it a point to know the street address of every customer and of practically every householder in the town. His steady customers are marked on this map with black pins. White pins designate the people who are periodical buyers and red pins represent those who are not buying as much in his stores as they were at one time. This indicates to him just where he should, (without neglecting his good customers,) give just as good service as possible to the others so that he will get them into the black pin class. Mr Werrett endeavors to be the first in his town to introduce new lines of goods. For instance a short time ago he got in a stock of new cake flour. He had a cake made from this and put it on the counter with a number of packages around it. By having customers taste the cake he was able to introduce this new line into practically all the homes of his regular customers. On a line of this character good customers seldom question the price as they are not familiar with the product and do not know what the regular price of it should be.

Last fall Daniel McDonnell, a merchant in Kamloops, British Columbia, found himself with too heavy a stock of canned pineapple. He wanted to get rid of this. He ran across a recipe for citron preserve which called for a portion of pineapple. He found out that the pineapple greatly assisted the flavor of the citron and made it a point to tell each one of his customers about it. In this way he cleared out his entire stock of pineapple, some fifteen cases, with the exception of a few cans. This merchant has a hobby for collecting recipes and for being able to tell his customers something good that can be made of practically each product in his store. He feels that it is up to him to be able to answer all such questions put to him by customers in order that they will have confidence in him and in his recommendations.

Utilizing Extra Floor Space

Hugh Stephens of Collingwood, Ontario, found himself with too much floor space for the use of his regular grocery department. He divided this and put in an ice cream parlor and during the winter months sells hot beverages. In the summer time he gets the young people into the store and always makes sure of having an attractive display of confectionery where it can be seen as people are coming in and going out. He says results have surpassed his expectations and one of the gratifying features has been a substantial increase in the turn-over of groceries. His tea room where all kinds of hot beverages, as well as ice cream are dispensed, brings in new customers during the winter season.

Mr. Middleton, of Uxbridge, Ontario, has had the same experience with a refreshment parlor. He found that it was the means of selling more groceries.

Hull & Segwick of Sarnia, who have a soda fountain in their grocery store, have secured some splendid business not only in soda fountain lines but in groceries as well. Last winter they sold 150 gallons of oysters over the fountain.

him to keep purchases down, reduce debt, buy small and turn often. Lastly, I told him what I wish I might emphasize so nobody would fail to get it, that freight and express are not expense but part of cost.

Going over his letter again, I see several things, but first to get at his question. I always inventoried my stock and from that deducted what I owed against it, entering the net stock. That always served to call my attention to just what I owed, what proportion was owing on the stock and what was the true net. I liked the method because clean cut and such as made me visualize conditions.

Now I find that the sales for the year, $21,461, cost $16,256.38, which shows gross earnings of $5,204.62. Take out stated expenses of $2,806.79 and net earnings should be $2,397.83. If any such net has been made, he should be on Easy street and be able to wipe out all deficits forthwith. Moreover, such figures would indicate that gross earnings have been more than 24.25% on sales, more than 100% of the average stock carried.

The figures given yield expenses of 13.8% plus and show net profits of 11.17% plus on sales. If these figures are authentic, if nothing is left out, this man may not be able to "figger," but he surely knows how to make money out of his business! I certainly hope it is all true as reported, but should be very much interested to find out. It is a most remarkable case if it is true.

The figures show turnover of somewhat more than seven, which is not indicative of any special skill or efficiency.

I fear this is only another case of partial figures—where I am handed a few facts and expected to make correct deductions therefrom. If so, I'd like the rest of the story so I may be really helpful if possible, but if these are all the facts, I certainly congratulate this grocer as a king-row merchant.

ADDING ICE CREAM

N. R. Fairchild, retail grocer, Brantford, Ont., has recently added ice cream to his stock for the first time. Another Brantford grocer who has begun selling ice cream is George E. Townson.

Collection of Interest on Accounts

It is Necessary That the Rate of Interest on Overdue Accounts be Agreed to in Writing by the Debtor in Some Way—Some Legal Opinions on This Subject

A SUBSCRIBER writes to Canadian Grocer as follows:

I am getting out a new counter check book and wish to ask you whether if printed on this that interest will be charged on overdue accounts it would be legal without any signature of the purchaser to that effect.

Judges take the stand that interest cannot be charged on open accounts even though they be past due, unless it is covered by an agreement to that effect or by note or by judgment. Kindly give me this information.

The legal rate of interest is 5 per cent where no other amount is mentioned in the undertaking. A maximum of 1 per cent a month or 12 per cent a year is allowed by law to be stated. It is necessary that the rate of interest on overdue accounts be agreed to in writing by the debtor in some way. This appears to be the law as it applies to the province of Ontario. However, each province and state has its own mercantile laws, so that it would be necessary to obtain legal opinion on these.

It would therefore appear that merely placing the words "interest at 7 per cent per annum charged on overdue accounts" on statement form does not give the seller proper legal protection in the matter, though it is the accepted business policy to do so. It would be necessary that this should appear on a contract or some such signed document.

The following advice on this point is from a legal authority on the subject:

"In cases where collection is made without suit, the laws of Canada do not allow for recovery from debtor, of the charges sustained by you.

"Where suit is undertaken, the party defending, should the action prove successful, is bound by law to pay whatever expense the court has been put to. In certain cases, the debtor is also bound to pay some of the plaintiff's attorneys fees, but never commission on the amount recovered for the plaintiff. In the Division Courts of Ontario, debtors pay actual court costs, but you are held liable for commission and attorneys' fee for conducting the action. The latter varies any where from 3.50 to a full 10 per cent of the amount involved.

Must be Undertaken by Debtor

"With reference to interest, the legal rate of 5 per cent applies automatically to any note, acceptance or judgment. You are quite within your rights in asking for 7 per cent on overdue accounts, but you cannot enforce payment of same, not even 5 per cent, unless the other party signifies his willingness to the arrangement—in other words, there must be an undertaking on the part of the debtor, to pay interest before you can enforce the same."

A recent ruling on this subject given in Saskatchewan, is as follows:

The rule in allowing interest is founded either on the ground of (1) a contract expressed or implied to pay interest, or (2) as damages for the improper withholding of money or for the breach of some contract or violation of some duty, or (3) where it is given under the provisions of some statute.

Chapter 39 of the Statutes of Saskatchewan, being King's Bench Act, is the statute which deals with interest in Saskatchewan, and in section 28 it provides that interest shall be payable in all cases in which it is now payable by law or in which it has been usual for a jury to allow it. Subsections 1 and 2 of section 29, however, are the sections which we would be particularly interested in, as subsection 1 provides that upon the trial of an issue or upon an assessment of damages, upon a debt or sum certain, payable by virtue of a written instrument at a time certain, interest may be allowed from the time when the debt or sum became payable; while subsection 2 provides "if such debt or sum is payable otherwise than by virtue of a written instrument at a time certain, interest may be allowed from the time when a demand of payment was made in writing, informing the debtor that interest would be claimed from the date of the demand."

Some Cases in Point

In Hart vs Greer, 9 W.W.R. p. 709, the district court judge held that the printed words on an account, "interest at 10 per cent chargeable after thirty days," together with verbal references to these words and notification that interest is being charged, constitute a demand in writing sufficient to support a claim for interest after the expiration of the thirty days.

In Marshall Wells vs Eaton & Gordon, 8 W.W.R. p. 789, the district court judge of the Calgary Judicial District stated in his judgment as follows:

"It has also been held that a general intimation on a tradesman's statement of account that interest will be charged after a certain period of credit, is not a sufficient notice of demand of interest within s. 28 of 3 and 4, William IV., ch. 42, in re Edwards, Williams vs Trench, 61 L.J., ch. 22. This decision still stands as an authority on this particular point, but insofar as it decided that an agreement to pay interest would not be implied by the courts (in respect of moneys due on an account for goods sold and delivered) from the past dealings of the parties, it has been overruled by the Court of Appeal, in re Anglesey, Wilmot, vs Gardner (1901), 2 ch. 548, 70 L.J., ch. 810, which lays down the same principle as that contained in Higgins vs Sargeant and Nichol vs Thompson, that an agreement to pay interest may be reasonably inferred from the previous dealings of the parties, and that in such cases it is recoverable."

In that case he decided that in the absence of some special usage of trade or of some stipulation expressed or implied, a trader is not entitled to interest on the price of goods sold and delivered. An agreement to pay interest, however, may be reasonably inferred from the previous dealings of the parties, coupled with a printed notification of intention to charge interest on the vendor's statement of account.

In the case, Marshall Wells vs. Eaton & Gordon, the plaintiffs had printed in heavy type on their statements the words, "Interest at 8 per cent charged on all overdue accounts," and the judge found as a fact that the defendants were in the habit of making payments from time to time on account of their indebtedness, and that, although they were aware that interest was being charged to them, they evidently did not wish to force the issue of their liability or nonliability to pay such interest until the final settlement of the account, when they evidently intended to raise the question of their liability to pay interest.

Implied Understanding

In the result the judge held that the court of dealings between the parties, coupled with the printed notification on the plaintiff's statement of account, sufficiently evidenced an implied understanding or agreement to pay interest, to bring the case within the general principle that an agreement to pay interest may be reasonably implied from the previous dealings of the parties, coupled with a printed notification of intention to charge interest on the vendor's statement of account.

The district court judge considered the case of Marshall vs Eaton & Gordon, mentioned above, and decided that while as stated by the judge in that case, the printed words taken alone do not constitute a written demand under the Act, they do limit the period of credit or render the account payable within the time therein specified, so as to bring the case within the first part of subact above referred to, and that where the attention of the debtor is called to

The Price War in Quebec

MONTREAL is in the throes of another price war in the wholesale grocery business, perhaps the worst that has been in many years. Prudence has been thrown to the winds. The Wholesale Grocers' Guild and all that it has stood for is disorganized and may be abandoned and literally some of the speaking lines of communication have been broken. So keen has the fight become that some wholesale houses have this week sent out their men with open prices on many lines and instructions to meet all competition in price.

Apparently in the fury and turmoil of it all, the members of the Guild have forgotten all the enthusiasm and good intentions with which they returned from the Wholesale Grocers' Convention in Quebec last June. Perhaps few remember the warning words of O. J. Moore, president of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association when he said: "I can see only two roads that lead from the price-cutting practice. One leads to the sheriff's office and the other to the asylum." Then, too, the present president of the Canadian Wholesale Grocers' Association, upon his return, said through the columns of Canadian Grocer: "Price cutting is a parasite eating away the earnings of a business. We must cease our petty strifes, cease throwing mud in each other's faces and settle down to saner business methods."

And yet, prices on grocery lines in Montreal speak for themselves. The conditions are now worse than they were at that time. Can the wholesalers expect to develop the confidence of the retail trade if the very bottom is going to be knocked out of the grocery market at a time when business was just settling down with sure signs of improvement? Can the wholesale grocers expect the retailers to fight their own battles with assurance when stumbling blocks are cast in their way by the myriad of prices that are now being quoted on staple grocery lines? There is a menace at present threatening the retail grocery trade in Montreal in particular, which is only augmented by the internal strife in the grocery trade. If the wholesalers would stop to think they must surely see they are opening wide the door for something that for the past ten years they have been fighting to keep out. It is to be hoped that the near approach of the annual convention of wholesale grocers will tend to calm the present situation and bring back the stability that is essential for prosperity and goodwill.

The Case of Margarine

IN HIS REPORT on oleomargarine, Dr. McGill, Chief Analyst of Canada, says: "Oleomargarine, if made well, is a wholesome and palatable article of food, and there is no ethical or hygienic reason why it should not be found in our commerce." Under the present law, the sale of the oleomargarine ceases to exist in September next and the sale by retail must be discontinued after March first, 1923, unless prompt action is taken to make the manufacturing and importation of oleomargarine a permanent measure.

There is no reason why oleomargarine should not be made a permanent article of food for Canadians. The Chief Analyst for the Dominion of Canada says it is a palatable article of food. Hon. W. S. Fielding, now Minister of Finance, says that "if oleomargarine is a legitimate article of commerce, why should we interfere with it at all? Every country in the world except Canada recognizes that it is a legitimate article of commerce and the people of Canada have welcomed it as a wholesome article of food as at the present time there is upwards of one million pounds consumed monthly.

In face of these facts then how can the Hon. W. R. Motherwell, Minister of Agriculture, desire this much wanted food barred from Canadian citizens? The only class of citizens who appear to want oleomargarine barred is a few of the dairy farmers who apparently cannot see any further than their own self interests.

Collecting Old Accounts

A BRANTFORD, Ont., retail grocer discussed with a Canadian Grocer representative the other day the importance of collecting old accounts before they got too big. He had recently gone over his books and made a list of customers who he considered were over-stepping the mark, and has since been making a point to collect everything outstanding. The fact that some customers expressed the opinion that he was questioning their honesty and ability to pay, indicated all the more the urgent necessity of getting strongly after them.

One woman who owed him a considerable amount pointed out that he need not be afraid of his money as she had all her other debts paid. "Just why many people pay their other debts and leave the grocer to the very last is a problem that I have never been able to understand," remarked the merchant. "People seem to think that they can do as they please with the grocer but that they must settle up all other debts promptly."

Now that Spring is opening up and many people are obtaining work, who have been idle during the winter, retailers should make a point of getting in everything outstanding just as soon as possible. Some people cannot stand prosperity and spend their money as they go forgetting all about the money they owe. Take the very first opportunity of getting in your money.

Making Displays Effective

MERCHANTS who spend a great deal of thought and time upon trimming attractive window displays, do so with the one object in view and that is to sell goods. The truth of this assertion was quite apparent in a recent window dressing contest put on by a manufacturer of a certain brand of cooking oil. The first prize went to the window which was not only artistic in design, but also illustrated the use of the oil by actual results. Various kinds of cakes and salads were made up. Ribbons led the eye from these articles to receipts pasted on the glass of the window, thus putting the human interest touch in the display and forming the final link in the silent sales talk. Sales, during the time this article was on display in the window, mounted considerably and totalled much larger than the sales by those merchants who did not use some such plan.

Thus demonstrating that customers will buy when the goods are placed before them in such a manner that the use is readily understood.

This Grocer Wins Trade in Unique Way

In the Most Competitive District, He Declares He Has Built up a Substantial Business by Using Personal Letters to 250 Customers in a Neighborhood Right Around His Store

By British Columbia correspondent Canadian Grocer

VANCOUVER, B.C.—To build up a thoroughly substantial business in one year in the most competitive district in Vancouver, is the accomplishment of J. H. Fielding, doing business at 1014 Cardero street. The Fielding grocery store is small. It would be considered small in comparison with most small grocery stores. Big retailers, long established, hedge the district on every side. The delivery vans of the bigger merchants ply up and down the street every day. Every prospective customer that Fielding has, is reached by one—perhaps two—of the big city dailies with their dominating advertisements for the large stores. Price cutters buy space regularly to tell Fielding's customers that every line that has merit and an accepted price can be bought somewhere for less than cost, yet.

Fielding is doing a good business—a better business every week. He sells for cash—but gives service, too.

Using Letters to Get Trade

The secret of the Fielding business is personal touch. This personal touch between merchant and customer has been fostered and maintained by the regular use of form letters.

Mr. Fielding staked out a small district around his store, and set out to make it his. He wrote letters—friendly letters—that invited further acquaintanceship. These letters were reproduced in a machine installed in the small store, and delivered by hand to those customers who resided within the "homestead" that Fielding had staked for himself in Vancouver. The next week another warm hand-clasp went out in black and white—to the same folks. And so this thing has been carried on for several months—and it is paying well.

"Too expensive," some one may say.

There are just 250 letters produced and sent out every week, and, as Mr. Fielding has computed it, the cost is just $2 per week. This pays for the paper and ink and also allows depreciation on the machine and the typewriter that will allow for complete replacement in five years.

Intense Merchandising

"Two hundred and fifty copies of an advertisement are not enough," some one may say. In this regard this retailer says: "I am working on the plan of intensive merchandising to a few rather than spasmodic, scattered attacks on the field at large. If I could get those 250 families to trade with me, I would be doing considerably better than the average retail grocery." (In one Pacific Coast city it was estimated that the average number of families served by each grocer was only 80.)

Results have more than convinced Mr. Fielding that he is on the right track for building up a family trade. He has won the custom of very many of the ones to whom he has directed his letters.

Here Are Some of the Letters

How could a customer fail to be interested in a letter to her which started off:

"There are some things we know. There are some things that we do not know we know, and then some other things of which we have no idea whatever.

"We found this to be a fact a few days ago when, in our search for quality in coffee, we discovered a coffee blender who knew his business from A to Z.

"To put the whole of an interesting afternoon in a nut-shell, he told us, and showed us—

"First—and fundamentally—there must be quality in the beans.

"Secondly—there must be a long ageing of those beans.

"Thirdly—extreme care in blending, and,

"Lastly—the utmost expertness in the matter of the final roasting. Then he passed along a sample of his best effort. Nothing further was required. We now have this coffee for you; sold under an absolute guarantee of satisfaction."

This One Deals With Tea

This letter introduced a considerable number of new customers to the coffee counter, and was followed by another as follows:

"It may be a coincidence—or it may not, suffice it to say that a few days after our recent success in finding the End of the Trail in our quest for quality in coffee, we were rewarded with the same thing in tea—and found the same kind of man back of it.

"The things he told us about tea were a revelation. We can easily understand now why he spent a lifetime in the accruing of his knowledge. You will understand, with your first purchase, just why we back its value against anything else on the market. You are the judge—the only judge. The verdict lies with you. Our usual guarantee."

"Yours for better local service,
"J. H. Fielding,
"Select Groceries."

This signature is used on all letters, the name being a fac-simile signature.

On another letter featuring other lines Mr. Fielding says:

"To avoid getting groceries that are not up to your standard of quality look for the store that advises you to purchase only products of highest repute, and gives you an absolute guarantee of satisfaction."

Business is responding to this careful cultivation and Mr. Fielding proposes to keep it up every week.

GROCERY CLERK RETURNS TO HOMELAND A WEALTHY MAN

Kingston, Ont., April 25.—A special despatch received by the British Whig from London, England, tells an interesting story of how a former grocer at the village of Portsmouth near Kingston became quite wealthy. The despatch says: "Romance surrounds the return of an emigrant, Cecil Southcott, to England after 13 years spent in Canada. He went out in search of a fortune, and today he reached Liverpool a wealthy man, having found the fortune he sought."

"My success in life is due to one thing, and one thing only," said Mr. Southcott, "And that is, giving a fair day's work for a fair day's pay."

COLLECTION OF INTEREST ON ACCOUNTS

the notice and he is notified that interest is being charged, it constitutes a demand in writing informing the debtor as is required by the said subsection.

To sum up, therefore, it would account to the effect that interest as appears from the cases above quoted that if a notification is printed on the notice a specified rate will be charged after a certain period the debtor will be liable to pay interest by virtue of that notification, if (1) he has been in the habit for a period of time of making payments from time to time on accounts bearing the notification and including interest, so that an agreement to pay interest could be inferred from course of dealings between the parties; or (2) if, after the expiration of the credit period intimated on the account, a demand is made for payment from the debtor and interest is demanded pursuant to the notification printed on the account, although as a matter of evidence and in any event to make the position stronger, the demand for payment of the account and the interest should be made in writing.

CURRENT NEWS OF THE WEEK

G. W. Walrond, Canadian manager of Cerebos, Limited, has returned to Toronto from a business trip to the firm's headquarters in London, England.

Six gypsies entered a grocery store owned by Sam Jacobs, at Danforth and Lyton avenues, Toronto, and stole $6 in money, and a quantity of groceries.

J. B. Willitts, retail grocer, Brantford, Ont., will shortly be remodelling his store front. The present one will be taken out and will be replaced by a new one.

The Oxdrift Co-operative Co., Ltd., have taken over all the goods, wares and merchandise and the business of Pronger Bros. at Dryden, Ont., in the district of Kenora.

Woodstock merchants will commence the first Wednesday in May to observe the weekly half holiday, and will continue to do so during the months of May, June, August and September.

The general store of John Armstrong & Co., at Brigden, 16 miles from Sarnia was destroyed by fire the other day, the loss amounting to $60,000. A large stock of groceries was included in the merchandise destroyed.

The death occurred recently at his home in Winona, of Ira E. Vanduzer, known throughout Ontario as one of the best authorities on many fruits. He was in his 66th year. He is survived by one son and one daughter.

Retail merchants of St. Thomas are re-organizing. A banquet was held last Thursday night when re-organization plans were formulated. W. C. Miller, provincial secretary of the Ontario R. M. A. was the chief speaker.

Thomas William Hart, commercial traveler for the Nugget Polish Co., passed away in Toronto last week. He was overseas in the Great War and won both the D. C. M. and the Croix de Guerre medals. He is survived by his widow, one brother and two sisters.

Fire at St. Jacobs, Ont., completely destroyed the flour milling plant of the Snider Flour Milling Co. The loss is estimated at anywhere from $75,000 to $100,000. The cause is unknown. 13,000 bushels of wheat and a large quantity of flour just ready for shipment were destroyed.

Stephen Hustwitt, one of the oldest commercial travelers in Ontario passed away in Toronto last Saturday. In business he had at one time been connected with Perkins, Ince & Co., Davidson & Hay, Toronto and T. B. Greening Co., at Hamilton. For the past twenty years he was the representative of the T. H. Estabrookes Co., at Winnipeg, from which firm he was compelled to retire six years ago, through ill health. He is survived by four sons and three daughters.

Business Changes

W. F. Shouldice, grocer at Shaw and Dundas street, Toronto, has sold his business to J. Hance.

DOBSONS GROCETERIA, LTD., IS INCORPORATED

Dobsons Groceteria, Limited, has been incorporated under the Ontario Companies Act, to carry on the wholesale and retail business of grocers, grain and provision merchants in all its branches, and to import and export the products of the said business. The provisional directors are Hollis Bowman Chute and Charles G. Webster, Toronto, Thos. W. Dobson, secretary, and Walter Pemberton and William Pemberton, grocers in Hamilton. The company is capitalized at $250,000, the head office being in the city of Hamilton.

Believes Conditions Are Very Much Better in the Old Land

Returning from the Old Country, where he had spent the past several months, J. T. Menzies, of Stewart Menzies & Co., manufacturers' agents, Front Street W., Toronto, expresses the opinion that things are picking up over there. Costs, he states, are gradually coming down, and people are settling to work. He thought conditions were even improved very much at the time of his departure from England as compared with his arrival just a few months before. There appears to be more desire on the part of the people to bring about a normal state of affairs.

Speaking of the jam industry, Mr. Menzies believes that the quality of the pack this year will be very much better than for some time for the reason that the farmers have been giving their farms the proper attention again since the war, which they were not able to do during the conflict. The quality of the fruits should be very much better.

Confectionery Men to Hold Convention in Montreal

The annual Convention of the Confectionery, Biscuit and Chocolate Industries of Canada, will be held at Montreal on May 9th, 10th and 11th, at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel. The program will be filled with business of interest to every delegate. The usual routine of business of the Convention will be followed by discussion of questions of vital importance to all members.

A special feature will be an exhibition of Associate Industries in the ball room of the Ritz. The Harbor Commission will entertain the delegates one afternoon by a trip on the St. Lawrence. Arrangements are also being made to visit various plants in Montreal.

The Annual Banquet will be held on the night of May 10th, and the executive hope to secure as the leading speaker, Sir Lomer Gouin, Minister of Justice. The annual luncheon will be addressed by His Honor, Mayor Mederic Martin, and C. W. I. Woodland.

Jam Firms do Not Want Duty to be Lowered

Ottawa, (Special)—There was a deputation here from some of the Ontario jam manufacturers during the past week, interviewing the Finance Minister in regard to duty on jams coming into Canada. The Ontario firms maintain that no downward movement should be made in duties on jams and presented their case to show that if any change is made, it should be in an upward direction. Those who came to Ottawa for the interview were James Wagstaff and W. R. Drunan, of Hamilton, Mr. Ross, of Simcoe, and Senator E. D. Smith, of Winona.

The duty which Canadian jam manufacturers had to pay on sugar, Hon. Mr. Fielding was told, scarcely offset the duty on jams coming into Canada and foreign firms were able to secure a drawback on the duty paid on sugar used in their exported products. There was in addition the question of cheaper labor to contend with.

The Finance Minister promised to give the contention of the Canadian firms his consideration.

St. John, N. B., Retail Merchants Elect New Officers

St. John, N. B., April 24.—The annual meeting of the Retail Merchants' Association of this city was held recently. A banquet started the evening, and the feature apart from the election of officers, was an address by Dr. W. C. Kierstead, professor of economics at the University of New Brunswick. The officers for the incoming year are as follows:—President, R. A. Macaplay; first vice-president, A. E. Everett; second vice president, S. L. Emerson; treasurer, J. H. Marr. The advisory board includes F. A. Dykeman, chairman, F. W. Daniel, A. O. Skinner, M. E. Grass and S. E. Fisher.

FEDERATED BUSINESS MEN'S ASSOCIATION ELECT PRESIDENT

A meeting of the Federation of Business Men's Associations was held recently in the club rooms of the Bloor-Bathurst Association, Bloor Street west, Toronto., with the vice-president, Eric Harris, in the chair.

Representatives of eight of the 20 associations of the city and suburbs were present and fitting tribute to the memory of the late president, M. E. Standfield, was paid.

G. W. S. Shipman, St. Clair Avenue and District Association, was elected president, and W. R. Willard, secretary was elected to the dual office of secretary- treasurer, in place of T. R. J. Wray, treasurer, resigned.

Letters To The Editor

CLOSING OF STORES

Editor, Canadian Grocer:

The Ontario Statute of 1921 says: "If an application is presented to a city or town council signed by not less than three-fourths in number of the occupiers of any class of shops situated within the municipality the council shall pass a by-law requiring all shops, belonging to the class specified in the application, to be closed and remain closed on one particular day of the week during such hours between twelve-thirty o'clock noon andifve a. m. of the following day, during such periods of the year as named in the application."

As the Statute does not mention townships, if the occupiers of any class of shops presented an application signed by three-fourths in number of the said shops in the township, could the council legally pass a by-law closing said shops same as town or city?

B. G.

Windham Centre.

Editor's Note:—Townships are included in the statute in regards to the closing of stores. If you read the Act a little further you will find the following clause:—

(6) The Council of every township shall with respect to any portion of such township designated in the by-law, have all rights and powers conferred by this section on the council of a city, town or village, and may pass by-laws which shall apply only to that portion of the township designated.

Editor, Canadian Grocer:—

Referring to your letter of April 3rd, I wish to thank you for the trouble you went to in finding out the standing of the———and also for the very prompt manner in which you did this and for keeping me advised. Such service is certainly appreciated.

You served me so well in this instance, I am now going to ask another favor.

A month or two ago there appeared in the Grocer an article referring to the Dominion Act regarding the giving away of coupons with merchandise, as a method of obtaining business, stating that this was illegal. I am afraid I have misplaced my copy and would appreciate it very much if you could forward me another.

I would also like to make the suggestion that a table of contents be printed at the front of each issue of the Grocer, to help in looking up items like this.

Yours truly,

L. O. Campbell,

Nelson, B. C.

Was Representative for Many Years in Newfoundland

The death of Thos. T. Cartwright occurred in St. John's Nfld., on Monday, April 17. The late Mr. Cartwright was in his 67th year and was born in London, England. He was one of the most widely known commercial travelers in the eastern provinces and Newfoundland. At the time of his demise he was district sales manager of E. W. Gillett Co., Ytd., with which company he had been connected for about twenty-seven years, most of this time having been spent in Newfoundland. His genial disposition and high ideals of business integrity won for him a large circle of friends. He is survived by his wife and one daughter, who on account of the severe Newfoundland winters have made their home in Springfield, Mass., at which place the funeral was held on Thursday, April 27.

William Dobie, Honorary President, and Mr. Charles E. Moyle, sales manager of E. W. Gillett Co., attended the services at Springfield.

WINNERS IN BRANTFORD CONTEST

Importance of Showing Customer How A Product Can be Used in the Home

Brantford, Ont., (Special).—A window dressing competition was held among the local grocers last week by the Canada Starch Company's representatives, D. T. Williamson & Son, on their cooking oil, Mazola. Between 35 and 40 retail grocers entered the contest which was connected up with a series of cooking classes held in the Y. M. C. A. Mrs. Harris, a graduate of the University of Chicago Home Economics Department, was in charge of these classes and gave lectures on cooking each afternoon and showed exactly how certain dishes were prepared. About 100 women attended these lectures each day.

The winners of the window display contest were W. J. Beney, who captured first prize, McIntyre Bros., Geo. S. Winters & Son, and T. E. Ryerson. The judge of the display contest was B. T. Huston of Canadian Grocer staff. The contest showed that where the displays gave some ideas to the consumer on the uses of the product, better selling results were secured.

FORMOSA RICE PRODUCTION

The production of rice in Formosa for the first crop of 1921 was 12,447,000 bushels from 550,000 acres. An amended estimate of the second crop gives the production as 12,179,000 bushels from 691,000 acres, which would make the total production for the year 24,625,000 bushels from 1,241,000 acres. Production in 1920 amounted to 21,298,000 bushels and in 1919 to 24,417,000 bushels These figures are from The Board of Trade Journal, London.

WESTERN CANADA NEWS

Western

R. H. Thaler, Compeer, Alta., has sold out his general store to J. C. Melvin of Armstrong, B. C.

E. Carley, proprietor of the Swan River Trading Co., at Swan River, Man., suffered heavy loss when fire visited this place last week. Mr. Carley's loss is estimated at between $8,000 and $10,000. The entire loss in the town as a result of the fire is placed at $30,000.

R. J. Brown, who some years ago traveled for Tetley's Teas and later was buyer and salesmanager for the Edmonton Produce and Grocery Co., Edmonton, has joined the sales staff of Nicholson-Rankin, Winnipeg, and will cover the trade in the city in the interest of this firm.

Organizes Three R.M.A. Branches in British Columbia

Vancouver, B. C.—George S. Hougham, provincial secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association, British Columbia Board, has recently returned from an organizing trip in the interior of British Columbia. Branches were organized at Grand Forks, Princetown and Rossland. Visits were also paid to Cranbrook, Nelson and Trail where addresses were made to bodies of retailers. The city of Fernie was also visited.

Mr. Hougham clearly outlined exactly where the association stood in such matters as the "Personal Property Tax" the "Oriental Question" and the other major subjects that are receiving the attention of British Columbia retailers at this time. B. H. Peeps, the field organizer accompanied the secretary, and remained to complete the organization work at Trail. Fernie and some other centres that are linking with their neighbors for effective association work.

Officers at Grand Forks

The officers chosen at Grand Forks were as follows: President H. E. Woodland, first vice-president, R. Hodgson, second vice-president, D. McPherson, treasurer, Jeff Davis. A secretary will be appointed shortly by these officers.

Seventy retailers together with their staffs attended the meeting at Nelson, B. C.

Revelations in Oriental Problems Are Startling

Nanaimo, B.C., April 28.—On Wednesday, April 12, at the instance of the Retail Merchants' Association, Nanaimo, (which is, by the way, one of the most completely organized districts in Canada, from the retail standpoint) a mass meeting of representatives from almost every organization and body in that city was arranged to discuss the Oriental question.

From Vancouver, the Nanaimo association invited President Crowder, Provincial Secretary Hougham, Chairman Harkness and Past-President T. F. McDowell, Capt. McCauley, head of the Asiatic Exclusion League, was also present by invitation. Some of the facts brought out at that meeting were rather startling.

Capt. McCauley claimed that the Japanese Government, through the Japanese consul, through the heads of the Japanese associations, will finance their countrymen in buying fishing boats, (they now control the fishing industry) in buying fruit farms, hotels, dye works, etc., and the interest charged is at the rate of 2½ per cent.

Co-operative Store at Nanaimo, B.C., Goes Into Liquidation

Nanaimo, B. C., April 24.—The Workman's Co-operative Association at Nanaimo is in liquidation. This concern has been reported in difficulties for the last seven or eight years but the unequal struggle to pay dividends and at the same time show a saving for the fickle membership culminated in a receivership last week. The business as a going concern was sold by the receiver and will be conducted as a general store according to the new owner's intentions.

ENFORCING JAM STANDARDS

There was a meeting in Hamilton on Thursday of jam manufacturers, with Ottawa Government officials, in regard to the enforcing of standards on jams. This is one of a series of conferences that is being held to endeavor to arrive at some definite understanding. The plan of each manufacturer "policing" his own plant to see that the standards are lived up to is one that is under consideration.

Features in Canadian Grocer Spring and Summer Number

THE Annual Spring and Summer Number of Canadian Grocer will appear next week. It will be replete with articles that should have an instant appeal with the retail grocers, and should be invaluable to them, looking for suggestions to stimulate Spring and Summer trade. Two of the many special features in this issue will be the ice cream, soda fountain and confectionery department, and also the fruit section.

Robt. Kirby, of Sarnia, during the month of February, sold on an average 5 dozen ice cream bars every day. His sales of bricks averaged 36 daily. He has a fountain but only keeps it open during the Summer months. Read what he has to say about an ice cream department in a grocery store. John Speer, of Peterborough, tried selling ice cream for the first time in his grocery store last Summer. He is well pleased with his success and looks for even a better Summer this year. Several other merchants also tell in this issue the success of their venture into the ice cream field.

J. A. Carroll, Lindsay, Ont., sold a carload of fruit in two days. J. McTaggart, of Vancouver, sells oranges by the dollar's worth, and Morrow and Dean of the same city sell bananas by the pound. These and several other fruit stories appear in the Spring Number.

Building a summer trade with tourists, motorists, selling stories, articles telling how equipment saves labor and gets business, and a produce section of stories on selling meats, etc., will all be contained in the Spring and Summer Number of Canadian Grocer next week.

WEEKLY GROCERY MARKET REPORTS

Statements from Buying Centres.

MARKETS AT A GLANCE

THE sugar situation appears to be in a very unsettled condition. Wholesalers continue to cut prices below refiners' official lists and here also seems to be some irregularity in refiners' prices to the retail trade. This situation exists both in Montreal and Toronto while in some sections in the Western and Eastern Provinces slight reductions in quotations have occurred during the week.

The raw sugar market during the week was quiet with prices lower at 2¼c c. & f. New York as compared with 2½c c. & f. a week ago. The f. o. b. Cuba market was also easier, sales being made at 3.40c f. o. b. while some 7,000 tons were sold at 3.25c f.o.b. Cuba, part of which went to Canadian refiners and part to U. S. operators. Advices from San Domingo state that three centrals closed with shortages of 20% to 30% from estimated crops. The dry weather during the growing season is responsible for the shortages.

There are few changes in general grocery commodities. For the most part, prices are steady. Canned fruits and vegetables continue to show a good movement and prices are generally maintained. Rolled oats are easy as far as wholesale quotations are concerned, but manufacturers claim that the market is firm.

Coffees are in a strong position while teas show little change as compared with a week ago. The London tea market is yet unopened but primary markets continue strong with spot stocks in a like position.

Evaporated apples are becoming closely cleaned up and quotations are higher. Prunes on the New York market are easy while Coast prices are firmly held. Raisins are showing weakness and there are likely to be some reductions on this line, mainly on account of the quiet movement and the lateness of the season.

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, April 26.—The feature of the grocery market is the shocking cuts that have been made in prices, regardless of market conditions. The price war is once again on and list prices can be considered only nominal. Although the sugar refiners' lists stand at $6.15, local wholesalers are freely quoting $6.00 for standard granulated. Molasses has also been cut. In neither case is this a true indication of market conditions. Canned goods are cut but many are taking advantage of this cut to unload fruits that have been standing for some time. There is a feeling in the trade that the opening prices on the new pack of canned goods next season will be lower and there is therefore some uneasiness in the market that is not altogether a result of the cutting. Spices are firm and coffee is at a stand-still as far as price developments are concerned. Teas would no doubt be higher if it were not for local conditions. The rice market shows signs of weakness. Cutting has brought some lower prices on rolled oats but millers report the market as firm. Package goods are not in reality changed. Soaps are selling at almost any price. The vegetable market is easier with an excellent demand in the fresh line. Low prices on tomatoes and bigger supply of new potatoes are the features.

OPEN PRICES ON CANNED GOODS

Montreal

CANNED GOODS.—Canned goods, both vegetables and fruits, have been featured during the past two weeks as one of the weapons in the price war. The feeling of the trade is that the new pack will be quoted at a lower opening price and there is therefore uneasiness. Holders show some anxiety to unload and the tendency in most lines is to shade prices. This has been accentuated by the present local conditions and prices, particularly in canned goods have been slashed beyond all reason. It is only fair to state, however, that some of the present holdings of canned fruits are not in the best condition and therefore there is some reason for the sacrifice in price. Canned tomatoes and peas, are however being sacrificed since the market does not warrant a cut at this time. Prices listed are only nominal at the present time and some wholesalers are making sales at open prices.

DRIED APPLES STRONGER

Montreal

DRIED FRUITS.—The dried fruit market is quiet but evaporated apples continue to gain strength. The available supplies are limited and held in few hands. There is also a good market abroad for these stocks and the top of the market for the domestic supply has not yet been reached. Currants and raisins are quiet and primary markets show just a little weakness on raisins but nothing to affect local prices. Prunes are weak in New York and this is preventing an advance which the growers claim must come. Figures would indicate that the supply is not sufficient to carry the trade over till the fall and therefore just as soon as the holdings of outsiders have been cleared up the strength of the market may return. The market at the Coast stands firm and strong with no signs of uneasiness.

Montreal.

SUGAR.—The sugar market continues to be upset, although the refiners brought their price down to $6.15 per cwt. for granulated. Price cutting continues and local wholesalers are selling sugar freely at around $6.00. TEA.—The tea market maintains its strength but local conditions prevent any advance in tea prices. The wholesalers not participating in the price war are standing off with tea and do not show any anxiety to sell at present prices. While there is no change in price there is a feeling in the trade that an advance in black and Ceylon teas must come in the near future and buying for the retail trade in tea shows some improvement.

MOLASSES PRICES CUT

Montreal

MOLASSES.—Molasses is being used as a weapon in the present price war in Montreal and although the market hardly warrants the sharp declines, molasses can be bought in the city for 62c. per gal. The list price, however, is virtually unchanged but will likely be down as soon as the first shipment arrives in Montreal. In the meantime it is difficult to give any definite price on molasses since wholesalers are determined to meet each other's competition in this line and prices are open. There is no change in corn syrup however, the market being firm with a fair demand.

SOAP PRICES SLASHED

Montreal.

SOAP—Soaps are perhaps the chief instrument used by local wholesalers in their fight against each other. Sales at open prices are noted and general quotation seems to be $6.40 per case for the standard lines but some are quoting as low as $6.30 per case. One wholesale house sent out their travellers this week with instructions to sell soap and meet all competition.

PACKAGE GOODS STEADY

Montreal

PACKAGE GOODS—There are no changes in package goods lines this week. Some prices have been affected by the price cutting but in reality all prices are firm with a good steady trade. Prepared cereals in particular show an imoved demand in view of the spring d summer season.

LOWER PRICES ON VEGETABLES

Montreal

VEGETABLES—The feature of the vegetable market is the low prices on fresh tomatoes. Not in the memory of many of the older retail grocers has the price of imported tomatoes been so low at this season of the year nor has the demand been so general. Few had handled them so early in the year before but now almost every grocery store carries a fairly large supply. The market on this line however shows more strength this week on account of the increased demand. Asparagus, beets, carrots, beans, lettuce, and onions are lower in price. New potatoes are down to $12 a barrel and Quebec potatoes are easier. Cucumbers are down to $5 per basket. The vegetable market on the whole is easy in price with a good movement.

STRAWBERRIES MOVE FREELY

Montreal

FRUIT—The feature of the market is the big movement of strawberries and the low prices. The cold weather has helped marketing but the change has forced prices up this week. The demand has been keen and all that could be procured were quickly picked up in the city. Oranges are higher in price with Valencias scarce. Grapefruit are also higher but with a good demand. There is no change in the apple market and bananas are steady.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, April 26.—There is still considerable irregularity in sugar prices and refiners' official list appears to be entirely ignored. Refiners too seem to be making price concessions and the unsettled condition in the sugar situation would lead us to believe that a downward revision in list prices will again be made. Lima beans are quoted higher while split peas are marked lower. Canned vegetables and fruits continue to move freely with prices well maintained. Coffee is in a firm position while teas show no new developments. Post Toasties are reduced, also salt, sal soda and one brand of soluble coffee. Raisins continue to show weakness while prunes are lower in the New York market than at the Coast. Nuts are in a quiet demand with market conditions showing little change. Spices, rices and syrups are unchanged. Fruits and vegetables show an active movement, but there are few changes in quotations.

LIMA BEANS HIGHER

Toronto

BEANS.—A strong tone prevails in the market for beans with limas advanced ½c. per lb., making the present price 11c. in bag lots and [illegible] lb. higher in smaller quantities. Ontario beans show little change but prices are firmly held while foreign markets are also slightly stronger.

SPLIT PEAS LOWER

Toronto

CEREALS.—As the warmer weather approaches there is a tendency for the demand to ease off and buyers are more inclined to confine their purchases to immediate wants. Quotations on rolled oats are unchanged at $2.95 to $3.10 per bag but there appears to be a shade easier undertone, more particularly of a competitive nature as manufacturers claim the cost of milling is practically as high as some wholesale quotations to the retail trade. Split peas are reduced to $6.25 per bag and 6¾c. per lb. in smaller quantities.

WEAKNESS IN RAISINS

Toronto

DRIED FRUITS.—There is no change in the local market for prunes but the New York market appears to be in an unsettled condition with prices lower than at the Coast. Raisins are showing weakness, particularly on seeded in packages. Seeded raisins have not been moving in heavy volume this season and there is some doubt at the present time whether the stocks will be moved sufficiently before the new crop arrives, and as a result a weakness has developed. A despatch from the New York market on raisins says: "Buyers have a double object in view in getting down raisin prices: they not only profit by cheaper purchases of current packs, but they put the market in line for a more reasonable price on next season's crop." Evaporated apple stocks are steadily becoming exhausted and one large packer stated that their last car moved out the early part of this week.

SUGAR UNSETTLED

Toronto.

SUGAR.—Competition seems to be quite keen in sugar circles. There is quite a spread in prices between the various wholesalers, all being considerably lower than refiners' official lists. There also appears to be some irregularity in refiners' quotations to the wholesale trade. This condition of affairs has created a very unsettled situation and as refiners as well as wholesalers [illegible] prices in an effort to increase the volume of business, there is a possibility that price lists will again be revised downward.

Toronto.

MISCELLANEOUS.—A new lower price on salt in bags is as follows: barrels containing 140 2-lb. bags, $8.25 and barrels of 112 2½-lb. bags, $7.25. Regal, Purity and Sifto salt are quoted at $2.60 per case. Sal soda is reduced to $1.75 per bag. Blue tacks are quoted higher at 60c per doz. for 6 oz. pkts. and 75c for 8 oz. pkts. George Washington coffee is lower; following are the new prices: small size, $4.30 per doz.; medium, $8.49 per doz.; and large, $13.23 per doz. Royal Mayonnaise Dressing, 11 oz., bottles is quoted at $4.50 and picnic size at $2.10 per doz. Libby's mincemeat in kits is quoted at 27c per lb. and in No. 1 cartons at $1.35 per doz.

MANITOBA MARKETS

WINNIPEG, April 6.—Sugar declined 20c per cwt. Coffee holds a strong position and is steadily advancing. There is no change in the tea market other than continuation of the strength which has been prevailing for some time. Canned vegetables are maintaining a strong tone and canned tomatoes are reported scarce. Dried fruits are showing an easier tone under a quiet market. Beans are reported slightly easier and one line of corn flakes has declined. Fresh fruits and vegetables show few changes.

STRONG COFFEE MARKET

Winnipeg.

COFFEE.—The primary coffee market continues to rule in a strong position with prices steadily advancing. The local trade is steady with no change in quotations but just as soon as stocks bought at the low level are absorbed higher prices can be expected.

CANNED TOMATOES FIRM

Winnipeg.

CANNED GOODS.—Canned vegetables hold a strong position and stocks are reported light. Canned tomatoes are ruling firm and it is reported that the only supplies available are through eastern wholesale houses as canners holdings are practically cleaned up. New winter packed canned lobsters are on the market and are meeting with ready sale. Canned fruits are selling more freely with no change in quotations.

STRONG TEA MARKET

Winnipeg.

TEAS.—There are practically no new developments in the tea market other than a continuation of the strength that has prevailed for some time. Importers are talking of some further advances and claim there is less tea now being offered. Spot prices are still out of line with replacement costs and the trade can naturally look for prices to reach higher levels.

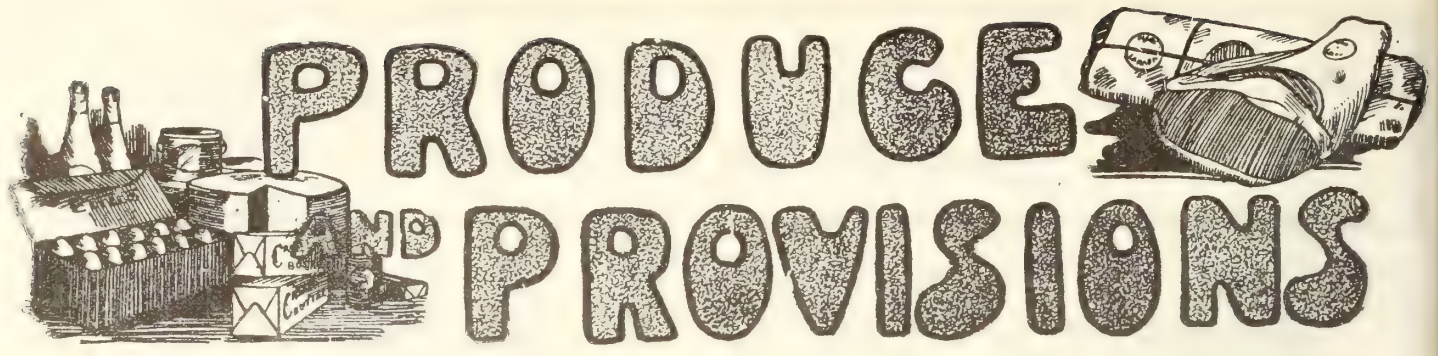
Macaroni for the West of England and South Wales

Acting Trade Commissioner A. B. Muddiman in Commercial Intelligence Journal, writes that in the west of England and South Wales the consumption of macoroni is not great among the English and Welsh. In fact the writer's experience of living conditions in England, the principal sales of macaroni are limited to areas such as Soho in London, where there are numerous Italians. However, macaroni pudding appears on the British family table, but not so often as the ubiquitous rice pudding. Macaroni au gratin is not a common dish, and little culinary ability is shown in this line. Consequently the dish is hardly popular.

During the war certain shipments of macaroni earned for the Canadian product a rather poor name in this area, and this must be lived down. Bearing in mind these two facts, that the demand is not large and that the Canadian product has not a favorable name, it may be of interest to examine the actual conditions to-day for this territory.

Though the texture of Italian macaroni and its quality is said to be much more uniform than that produced in Canada, a most favorable point in connection with Canadian macaroni is that it comes in packages of uniform weight, and this factor commends itself strongly to the wholesale houses distributing macaroni among the retail grocers. Italian macaroni as a rule comes in bulk, but packages also have arrived in this area of very uneven weight and they give the trade a lot of trouble. In advertising his macaraoni, the Canadian producer should strongly emphasize the uniformity of his weights, as apparently the Italian producers, working as a rule in the metric weight system, have not in putting their macaroni in packages solv the difficulty of pounds and ounces. It must not be imagined that though certain dealers here have been unfavorably impressed with war shipments, the whole trade is against Canadian macaroni, for several importers speak very highly of same, but all point to the smallness of the demand.



Changing Location of Meat Department Doubles Sales

Wm. Hobson & Co., King Street, Hamilton, First Had His Meat Counter at Rear End of Store But Moving it up Near the Front Results in Bigger Turnover

LOCATION is an important factor in the success of the store on the street, or the position of a department in a store. Wm. Hobson & Co., King Street, Hamilton, Ont., recently changed his meat department and lately in conversation with a representative of Canadian Grocer, he reported that already, the change had resulted in doubling his sales of meats. Meats include cooked varieties and the smoked lines, such as bacon and ham.

A year ago, when Mr. Hobson moved into his present premises, he placed his meat department at the far end of the store, on the right hand side, as one entered from King Street. Finding that the turnover in these lines was not as heavy as he thought it should be, he decided to move his refrigerator counter and the adjoining counter where meats are served, nearer to the front door. Having done this, he has found that his sales have practically doubled. People coming into the store now do not have to go to the rear of the store to be served meats. As they come into the store they are met with a nice display of cooked meats, bacon and general produce lines. The refrigerator counter is in two compartments, and is not kept cold through a centre section for ice, but is maintained at a certain degree of cold by a system of pipes. These pipes are packed in brine of chopped ice and salt, and in this way the cooling is kept at a uniform temperature. Even in the hottest weather cooked meats are always in first-class condition.

"The fact that we can display our cooked meats all the time certainly means an increased sale," remarked Mr. Hobson. "A nice showing of cooked meats will tempt people to buy every time, and in a counter such as this display is possible all the time."

Sales of cheese are also on a large scale in the Hobson store, and this firm has built up a reputation for cheese that means a great deal in the weekly turnover. Mr. Hobson stated that on an average, he sold five cheeses a week, apart altogether from sales of package cheese and certain other special kinds.

Canada's Imports of Canned Meats Are on Increase

Ottawa, April 24. (Special).—Figures tabled in the House of Commons at Ottawa a few days ago, show a very considerable increase during the last few months, in the quantity of canned meats imported into Canada. The total value of canned meat imports during 1920 was $337,727. That amount has already been exceeded in the first three months of this year, the value of the imports at the end of March being $483,246.

It is noteworthy that whereas in 1920 the bulk of the trading in canned meats was done with the United States, there has since been a considerable falling off in the imports from that country. In 1920 Canada imported 585,280 pounds, valued at $162,972 from the United States, and 240,819 pounds valued at $91,844 from the United Kingdom. The import figures for the first three months of this year are given as follows: From United States, 450,810 pounds valued at $110,874; from United Kingdom, 768,446 pounds valued at $181,624.

Argentine Leads

Argentine is shown to have supplied during the first three months of this year, even a greater quantity of canned meats than the United States. In 1920 the importations from that country were nil; in 1921 they amounted to 196,862 pounds, valued at $56,215; while up to the present this year they have amounted to 573,588 pounds, valued at $102,212. New Zealand has also taken a rather important place among the countries supplying canned meats to Canada. In 1920 the imports from that country were only 8,064 pounds, valued at $1,681; whereas for the first three months this year they have amounted to 262,214 pounds, valued at $37,565.

THE ACCOMPLISHED SOYA BEAN

Cast a seed to the winds and see what issue good or ill comes forth. Then regard the history of the soya bean, the leguminous pride of the Orient. Not until 1908 did the Western world gain adequate knowledge of the virtues of this useful plant, though for ages it has been a favorite article of food in China and Japan. Thirteen years ago the fame and utility of the soya bean were little known except in the Far East, despite its marvelous potentialities.

Ten years ago, says a bulletin of the Chinese Government's Bureau of Economic Information, the exports of the bean were infinitesimal, "but by the 1920 customs report it was found that in point of value the commodities grouped under the heading of beans and bean products occupied the first place among China's exports."

Originally valued only for its oil content and not imported into England until after the Russo-Japanese war, the soya bean now contributes its juices and its meat to a multitude of varied uses. By grinding, pressing and mixing, it is conjured into a vegetable food resembling marrowfat peas; it serves as meat substitute, a chocolate substitute, a macaroni preparation ,a coffee substitute; from it are made artificial milk, cheese, flour; it provides meat for cattle, oil cake for fodder, bean cake and fertilizer.

It enters into the manufacture of dynamite and high explosives, soaps, linoleum, rubber substitute, margarine, paints, varnishes, toilet powder, waterproof cloth, paper unbrellas and lanterns, salad oil, lamp oil, lubricating oil, sardine preservatives and lard substitutes.

From a provincial native product indigenous to Manchuria the soya bean has spread through China and Japan and to the United States. The annual production has attained the substantial figure of 8,200,000,000 pounds, of which 6,600,000,000 pounds are grown in China, 690,000,000 pounds in Korea, 80,000,000 in Japan and 110,000,000 pounds in the United States.

No longer limited to native cultivation and consumption, the soya bean has become a flourishing three power product, a worldwide food for animal and man, and a wellnigh indispensable raw material in many different industries.

Produce, Provision and Fish Markets

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, April 26.—In general, produce and provision prices are firm and the demand steady. Hogs were offered freely during the week and prices weakened with a drop of 50c per cwt. on selects. Smoked meats and bacon are steady in price with only a fair movement. The demand for cooked meats shows some improvement but prices are unchanged. The make of new creamery butter is larger and the demand good, but prices show an easier trend. The cheese market locally is unchanged with no improvement in the export demand. The fact that produce dealers have started to store eggs has helped to keep the egg market steady despite the large production. The consumption demand is also large on account of the fairly easy prices. The fish market is quiet, having not yet got over the effects of the Lenten season. Lard prices are steady with a fair demand for immediate requirements.

BUTTER PRICES EASIER

Montreal.

BUTTER.—A fair trade is passing in butter, there being a steady demand from local and outside buyers for fresh made creamery but there is little movement in exports. The supply of the new make is steadily increasing and indications are that there will be a big production with easier prices.

CHEESE PRICES UNCHANGED

Montreal.

CHEESE.—There has been no improvement in the volume of business for export account but the prospects are that there will be some developments in this direction early in May. The make throughout the country has been steadily increasing and in consequence of this several boards were opened in the province last week. Wholesale prices have a steady tone and are unchanged.

LARGER SUPPLIES OF EGGS

Montreal.

EGGS.—There has been no important change in the condition of the local egg market. Supplies are larger but they are well taken care of for storage accounts. In addition to this there continues to be a large consumption at the present level of values. The opinion is expressed that the egg market will go lower during May.

HOG PRICES LOWER

Montreal.

FRESH MEATS.—The feature of the local market for hogs is the increased offering of corn fed hogs which come from western points. The variety sold at $13 and $14 per cwt., weighed off cars, but towards the latter part of last week the market for this class weakened as the supply was in excess of requirements and dropped to $12.75 per cwt. Throughout the market a weaker tone is evident which is principally attributed to the increased offering on the market. Prices on select light weights show a decline of 50c. per cwt.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, April 26.—The hog market showed further weakness during the week, with prices dropping 50c per cwt. The market opened this week at $13 on the fed and watered basis but packers are bidding 50c lower and whether they will be successful will depend upon receipts. Fresh pork cuts are lower and there are easier tendencies on cured meats. Lard and shortening are in an easy position with a likelihood for reductions. Butter is easier while cheese also has easier tendencies. Eggs hold firm under an active demand for storage purposes. Fresh lake and sea fish are arriving in heavier volume while several frozen varieties are off the list.

BUTTER PRICES LOWER

Toronto.

BUTTER.—The market is easier with quotations reduced one to two cents per pound. The best grades of creamery prints are quoted at 41c. to 42c. and second grades 39c. to 40c. per lb.

TRAVELERS PROTESTING AGAINST PROPOSED TAX

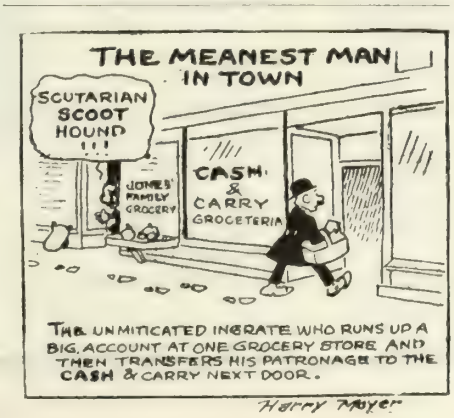
gory of $45 expenses for a five day week away to $60 for this class for a seven day week, and varying in other classes due to expense of moving trunks, etc.



THE MEANEST MAN IN TOWN
SCUTARIAN SCOOT HOUND
JONES FAMILY GROCERY
CASH & CARRY GROCETERIA
THE UNMITIGATED INGRATE WHO RUNS UP A BIG ACCOUNT AT ONE GROCERY STORE AND THEN TRANSFERS HIS PATRONAGE TO THE CASH & CARRY NEXT DOOR.
Harry Mayer

In explaining the ruling, R. Breadner, commissioner of taxation, Ottawa, states "from such moneys received (by travelers) there is allowed deduction of all expenses except one dollar a day for each day's traveling. This amount represents personal and living expenses, which, although usually included in a traveler's expenses, are not directly attributed to his business. In making returns travelers should classify themselves according to the three classes shown and indicate the number of weeks they were out on business during the year and state how many of the weeks they were away seven days and how many five days."

Merchants are Dubious

In discussing this matter a number of merchants indicated that such "frills" were undesirable in taxation, particularly in view of the high costs of collecting present taxes and also in view of the fact that various tax collectors throughout the country are inclined to make their own rulings on such points, the object of which is obscure and which is so broad as to encourage abuse. It was the opinion that the revenue raised by many such tax regulations is small compared with the cost of checking and collection.

Quebec Merchants Ask for Protection

Quebec, April 24.—A representative delegation of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada waited on the members of the Finance Committee of the Quebec City Council and urged the city to carry out certain reforms, which were deemed to be in the interests not only of the merchants but of the city itself.

The delegation was headed by Jos. Savard, president of the association, and the other speakers included Cyrille Faguy and Joseph Cauchon.

The delegation complained that parties came to this city from time to time to liquidate bankrupt stocks and only remained for a short time paying a small tax to the city. It was suggested that in their case they be charged the same amount as is paid annually by the merchants here who are under big expense and have to compete with this illegal competition. They also complained of people who came to hotels and sold goods for a week or two and then left.

As regards the dealers who come to the city to do business on the markets or through the streets and only pay a license of $20 it was suggested that the license be increased to $60. The merchants said that they had no objection to the city charging these visiting dealers a license of $100. The Mayor said that one dealer told him he was ready to pay a license fee of $200.

The delegation also asked that the tax of $15 charged on motor delivery vehicles be removed as the government had increased the license fee. The committee promised to give due consideration to the requests of the delegation.

THE following news despatch on Canadian salmon in the Old Country is of interest to every packer. Note the value placed on this retailer's recommendations in the last paragraph.

PRODUCING COSTS MUST BE REDUCED

Sale of B. C. Salmon in Britain and Europe Dependent on Prices

Col. F. H. Cunningham, formerly inspector of fisheries in British Columbia, who has been representing the canning interests of that Province in Europe during the past year, returned to Vancouver recently. He reported that the sale of B.C. salmon in Great Britain and Europe depended on keeping the price down, and putting up a good class of goods. He has advised the canners to get their cost of production down to a basis of competition with the product of Japan.

"The Englishman is not showing any sentiment now," said Mr. Cunningham. "He is working against strong odds, if he buys Canadian fish at a higher price than his competitor has to pay for Japanese fish. But with prices and quality equal there is no question in my mind that the goods of Canada would be given preference.

"All producing countries are to-day putting their goods on the English market, and establishing themselves by direct representation and advertising. Australia and South Africa are very keen in this direction, and if Canada desires to participate, greater efforts must be made."

Col. Cunningham paid particular attention to the education of retail vendors on the matter of color. He believes the retail grocers are now in a much better position to explain things to their customers. He has found always that a grocer's recommendation is a great factor towards the increased consumption of the lighter colored salmon. Col. Cunningham's publicity work was carried on by means of lectures, moving pictures, etc. Marketing prices and overhead costs must be reduced to the minimum to allow British Columbia to compete in the United Kingdom.

Practical Information

The Proprietary Article Price Issue of February 10 has met with a great deal of approval all over Canada. The attached unsolicited letter indicates what the retailers in one district think of it:

The Canadian Grocer,
Toronto,
Ontario,
Dear Sirs:—

The writer has been in touch with some of our customers the last few days who are prominent in the grocery business at different points, and we think it only right to tell you how much the proprietary price list in the issue of February 10th is appreciated by them. I heard different remarks that made me feel that the retail grocers viewed it as a special and live protection to their interests.

Protect Your Merchandise Against Pilfering

You will admit that it is not good business to leave your store unprotected while you go into the back room or the basement for a gallon of kerosene.

But hundreds of merchants do this every day.

A Bowser Tank is made to be installed in your sales room. It serves kerosene quickly, accurately and without contamination of other merchandise. It practically places the handling of kerosene on a package-goods basis.

This system will protect your profits.

ORIENTAL RICES ARE HIGHER

An advice from a New York broker on the rice situation says: "Oriental cables show a higher market everywhere and reports an increased demand. London and Hamburg are likewise strong, with stocks limited, European Garden being completely exhausted. Domestic markets in the South are quieter, but with prices somewhat fluctuating according to demand. The reports of the supply this season are very bullish, there being as of April 1 about 1,750,000 bags of rough and clean in first hands. The March distribution was 1,198,126 bags. California is not included in these figures, but a rough estimate shows less than 1,000,000 bags in that State. California reports a quiet but strong market."

Why Not Buy GOODWILL Ready-made?

Goodwill is the commercial value of a reputation. It consists of the times an article makes good with the user. So time is a big factor in Goodwill. Some grocers are wasting Time—their most valuable article in stock—in the vain attempt to build prestige for products that will not back them up.

Others are building solid by adding the Five Roses goodwill to their own. Think of the selling value back of a flour which has been consistently making good since 1887!

Look for the products with established reputations. These have time on their side. Harness their combined goodwill to your store. That's real salesmanship.

WAYAGAMACK PURE KRAFT

as a wrapping paper for groceries, fruits, vegetables, meats and provisions of every description.

Owing to its great strength the merchant can use a much lighter weight sheet than is necessary with inferior grades of wrapping paper and in consequence a great saving in cost is effected.

Bags made from this paper protect their contents as no other bag can do.

MALCOLM

"all-Canadian"

MILK PRODUCTS

The great convenience, economy and deliciousness of these three popular Malcolm products makes them exceptionally profitable summer sellers. For the picknicker, the camper, the summer resorter and for general household use there are none better in the world. Every can is hygienically processed from the rich pure creamy milk of government inspected cows in one of the finest dairying districts in Canada and they're guaranteed to be always fresh, rich, absolutely pure and sanitarily clean. Keep them well displayed this summer.

If you've never before sold MALCOLM rapid-selling lines it will pay you to try a sample order. Remember we pay freight on 5-case lots or over up to 50 cents per 100 lbs.

PROFIT

IS THE AIM OF ALL BUSINESS, BUT ONLY WISE BUYING AND SELLING CAN ASSURE IT.

Buy "SALADA"—

BECAUSE according to statistics every fourth pound of tea sold in Canada is "SALADA," which shows the colossal demand.

BECAUSE every pound bought from us is guaranteed to be pure, fresh and to sell, or we will refund the full purchase price and pay the return freight.

Sell "SALADA"—

BECAUSE it is the finest Tea value on the market and more people drink "SALADA" than any other tea sold in North America.

BECAUSE the quick turnover, supplied by the tremendous demand, yields by far the largest profit.

BECAUSE a satisfied tea customer is a good customer, and for thirty-one years "SALADA" has satisfied the most exacting tastes.

Push "SALADA"—

BECAUSE it will "pay" in increased profits, and satisfied customers.

"Back of the Guarantee is the Perfect Product."

Sun-Maid Outsells

all other branded raisins

More raisins are sold in packages labeled "Sun-Maid" than any other packaged raisins in the world.

That is due to quality, widely advertised.

Women by the millions have come to know these raisins as the best they've ever used.

Merchants by the hundred thousand sell more raisins because of Sun-Maid quality than they ever sold before.

And now the packers, the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers of Canada, Limited, are rendering a service to retail and wholesale merchants in the Dominion that makes this brand as satisfactory to handle as it is to sell.

Raisin sales and raisin profits will increase with Sun-Maids.

How He Got His Man

A merchant in Montreal wanted a man to manage his store. He advertised in the daily papers and secured many replies. He also used an announcement in the Want Ad. page of CANADIAN GROCER and several replies were received. He chose his man from the latter. In fact, the only men who at all suited his purpose, were those who applied through this paper.

CANADIAN GROCER reaches business men in the trade. There are good men scattered all over Canada who read the CANADIAN GROCER and who are interested in such a proposition.

To get the man you want; to secure a position; a partner, to sell some used equipment; to buy second-hand equipment, use the Want Ad page of CANADIAN GROCER. It gets results.

No wonder she smiles

The remarkable performance in the wash tub of these three popular cleansers never fails to win a smile of approval from busy housewives.

Wonderful Soap, Royal City Bar and Wonderful Soap Chips quickly whip up into a rich creamy lather that speedily cleans the clothes with scarcely any rubbing and they leave them soft and snowy white. Because they are absolutely pure soaps they will not injure the most delicate fabrics or filmiest laces. Their use makes bleaching unnecessary.

Housecleaning time is with us again and that means a bigger than ever demand for good soaps. Put an attractive display of these three old established sellers in your spring Housecleaning windows and on your counters. You'll find a satisfied customer and steady repeat orders in the wake of every first trial order.

"We'll say so!"

"A great book!" says one grocer. "Put a copy in each grocer's hands and have a law passed compelling him to read it and be guided by it."

"Am satisfied it is the only way to figure profits and margins," says another.

"I use the price-tables for more than half my groceries and could not get along without it. It's a great time-saver."

"Paul Findlay sure hits the nail square on the head. He has made me open my eyes on speculating."

"'Profits in Prunes' is wonderfully gotten up. It works out the problems so many of us retail grocers sleep on."

"It confirms exactly what I have learned during the last 15 years in the chain store business."

PAUL FINDLAY—the best known authority on retail food merchandising in America—wrote "Profits in Prunes." That is one reason grocers the nation over have been so glad to read it and profit by it. But here's the really-real reason:

In writing this book Paul Findlay was not interested in your success merely as a retailer of prunes; he was interested in your success as a retailer. That's why "Profits in Prunes" does not limit itself to prunes. Its principles and price-tables apply to anything in your store—any article that costs you 7¢ to 18¢.

We want every live grocer in America to have this new profit-book. It tells how to figure margins correctly; why margins must be figured on the selling price and not the cost; how to apply the simple rules and price-tables to your entire business. It will open your eyes not only to new profits in prunes but new profits in everything else. And it's free—send for your copy today. IMPERIAL Floor Dressing

Keep down the dust cloud-

Ordinarily the broom stirs up more dust than it collects—but not when floors are treated with Imperial Floor Dressing. You can then sweep without filling the atmosphere with dust, as Imperial Floor Dressing holds it to the floor where it is easily gathered up and disposed of.

Dusting is practically eliminated in stores where Imperial Floor Dressing is used, and counters, show cases and merchandise present a clean, attractive appearance at all times.

Imperial Floor Dressing is a sanitary preservative for wood, linoleum or oil cloth. It does not gum or evaporate and is most economical. One gallon will treat from 500 to 700 square feet of floor surface and one application will last for weeks.

Display Imperial Floor Dressing prominently. With your own floor as a practical demonstrator you can sell it readily to your trade. Our salesman will be glad to tell you more about this profitable line.

Only Supreme Quality Can Stand This Test

THE claims made for Palmolive in national and newspaper advertisements must be backed up by Palmolive quality or results would be disastrous. Only goods of the highest quality can stand the white light of publicity—this is the dealer's and the user's guarantee of the quality of advertised goods.

Uniformly High Quality

Every cake of Palmolive delivered to any dealer anywhere is the finest quality that can be produced by the combination of costly ingredients and manufacturing science.

This best soap is popularized the country over through brilliant and forceful advertising in every high-class medium. Your customers read about Palmolive in your newspapers. There are stunning color advertisements in the great Canadian national publications.

They naturally ask for Palmolive when they want soap, and Palmolive quality keeps them life users. None other satisfies after enjoyment of Palmolive quality.

Made in Canada

Palmolive is made in Canada, with the main factory located in Toronto. But the growth of business has made it necessary to maintain branches in Winnipeg, Montreal and Toronto. This expansion proves our statement that Palmolive is the most popular soap in the world, measured by sales value.

If you will order in sufficient volume to take advantage of quantity prices and make Palmolive your soap leader you will boost your Palmolive turnover enormously. To handle many unknown soaps which must be disposed of by word-of-mouth selling is effort which diminishes profit.

Save your own and your clerk's time by giving your customers something they know about and have confidence in—which moves quickly and yields immediate profits. Ask your jobber's salesman to-day, or see our representative on his usual trip.

Western Canada Wheat Field

POSSIBILITIES OF THE GREAT WEST

The three Prairie Provinces have a land area of 454,789,678 acres. There are 178,000,000 acres fit for farming purposes but in 1921 only 35,847,000 acres were under cultivation.

The interior plains of Canada and the plains of Russia are the world's reserve granaries of hard spring wheat. The record production of Canadian wheat is 393,542,600 bushels (in 1915).

Canada, through the western provinces, has risen to second place in the world among wheat producing countries and Canadian wheat leads the world in quality. Nine-tenths of our wheat is grown in the west. Only one-tenth of our wheat lands are under cultivation.

A Glimpse At Western Canada's Vast Resources

ALBERTA.—

The province of Alberta stands at the top in Canada in coal production. In 1920, it contributed 40.7% of the Dominion output, valued at over $30,000,000. Alberta stands high in grain production, and in ranch development. In 1921, the wheat yield was 53,044,000, oats 64,192,000 and all grains 140,750,000 bushels. Field crop value in 1921—$82,781,000. Only 12,964,000 acres of the 82,810,400 acres of arable land. Imports to Alberta in 1920-21 were valued at $24,227,312.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.—

Area is 395,000 square miles or 10% of all Canada. Larger in area than Italy, Switzerland and France. Mountain region equal to 25 Switzerlands. In 1920 value of fisheries was $22,329,161 or nearly half of Canada's total. Plants valued at $15,000,000; more than 60 salmon canneries. Four thousand fruit growers have $35,000,000 invested. Apple yield in 1921 was 1,009,000 bushels. 15,000,000 acres of land fit for successful agriculture. Capital in 250 or more lumber camps approximately $60,000,000. Imports in 1920-21, $81,615,288 and exports $112,685,111.

MANITOBA.—

Larger than Holland, Belgium and Germany combined. Dairying in 1920 valued at $15,939,846; field crops in 1921—$72,135,500; 700 elevators with capacity of 24,224,500 bushels. There are 25,000,000 acres of land fit for successful agriculture. In 1919 there where 1,622 industries established with capital of $111,535,665, employing more than 23,000 people. Population increased from 461.190 in 1911 to 613,008 in 1921, an increase of 32%. Manitoba has 4,500 miles of railways. Water powers estimated at 3,270,491 horse power with only 83,447 installed.

SASKATCHEWAN.—

Canada's greatest wheat producing province. Wheat yield—1921—173,580,000 bushels. Also leads in oats production with 32% in 1921 and flax 72%. Total value of agricultural products in 1921 approximately $416,471,194. In 1920 there were 60,325 automobiles compared with 55,010 in 1919. Number in 1908 was 74. In 1920 building done to value of $11,224,826. Dairy production in 1920—$23,455,774. Capacity of elevators 75,867,000 bushels number 2186; Saskatchewan leads Canada in horses with 948,280 in 1920. Population in 1921 approximately 745,000. Area 161,088,000 acres—twice as large as the British Islands.

THE FOUNDATION POLICY UPON WHICH OUR BUSINESS RESTS IS A FIRM'S RELIABILITY.

A FIRM'S EXPERIENCE.

A FIRM'S FINANCIAL RESOURCES.

These three points are worthy of your consideration when you are placing your products in a manufacturers' agent's hands.

¶ These important points have been the policy on which OUR BUSINESS was founded, and it has proved satisfactory to many manufacturers. We say it and say it advisedly that there is no other firm in Western Canada that can serve your interests more advantageously than we can.

The

Van Berkel

The Meat Slicer You Will Eventually Buy

To be without a modern meat slicer is practically branding your store as being twenty years behind the times. You are not giving your customers the fullest satisfaction and you are wasting your own money.

The Van Berkel slicer is built to give lasting satisfaction, that is why the first cost is not the all-important item. At first glance a "just as good" machine may look pretty good to you, but time will tell—and not a very long time either. The Van Berkel is absolutely reliable from the day you buy it, and your initial outlay is repaid many times in continuous money-saving service. When you buy a slicer you are not thinking only of to-day and to-morrow but of the years to come—then, see the Van Berkel.

SARNIA, ONTARIO
Co-operates with Hobart and Makes Money

Sarnia, April 3rd, 1922.

Hobart Mfg. Co.,
281 King St. E.,
Toronto, Ont.

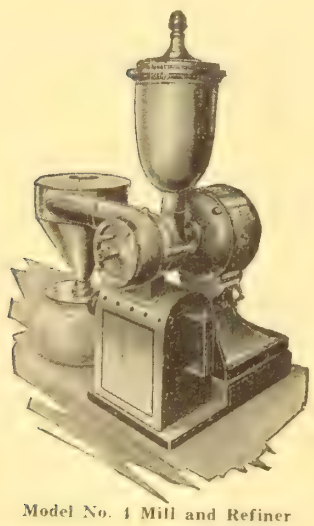
Dear Sirs:

Yours of March 30th, 1922. All that has been said is certainly correct and our sales are increasing every week. We intend to hold our coffee trade. The card that we got up was pieces selected from your "service book" as you will see by the enclosed one. We also bought twenty dozen percolators at $1.80 each and "gave" them away with one pound of coffee for $2.50. Every sale created a steady coffee user who formerly was "a once in a while." We know our machine will pay for itself in nine months, besides drawing custom to our store. We believe an electric coffee mill, and good coffee, are as necessary to the grocery trade as the air we breathe. Your liberal terms for payment places them in the reach of the smallest merchant.

We also wish to say that your traveller, Mr. Andre, is a fine chap, and we are more than pleased with our Hobart.

Wishing you the success that you deserve, we remain

Yours respectfully,
ROBT. KIRBY.



Model No. 4 Mill and Refiner

Write us for the "Hobart Service Book" on "How to Build and Hold a Retail Coffee Business." You can get valuable information from this book, and it will not obligate you in any way to buy a mill. The Hobart Mill is made in Canada, in seven different sizes.

THE FOUR

Every tin of these excellent fish products is processed and packed from carefully selected fish under ideal hygienic conditions. They are prepared just as soon as the catches are brought in from the clear, cool depths, in our modern factory at Black's Harbour on the New Brunswick coast. Their flavor is unbeatable, their quality high grade and their price low—a winning combination that has made them leading sellers from coast to coast.

Just say "Brunswick Brand" to your wholesaler when you order canned Sea Foods. It will insure that you get "live" sellers.

BIG LEADERS

Brunswick Brand Sea Foods

MAKE THEM YOUR LEADERS FOR THE SUMMER TRADE

The great convenience and excellent flavor of Brunswick Brand Sea Products makes them exceptionally good sellers during the warm weather months. It is during this time that housewives are especially looking for food stuffs which are delicious and wholesome, yet require no standing over hot stoves in their preparation.

A good window and counter display of Brunswick Sea Foods with a card suggesting that they require no cooking and are ready to serve on opening will bring you results that will surprise you. Hundreds of grocers have found such a display highly profitable. Get one up today—it will pay you well.

Look over your stock now and order a good supply to meet the big summer demand for canned sea foods.

HALIFAX, Aug. 4.—A good example of merchandising progress in the Maritime Provinces, is afforded by the new store of Hopgood & Sons, Spring Garden Road, Halifax, which in appearance, arrangement and equipment is one of the most modern grocery stores to be found in Canada.

Counters, display cases, scales, lights, refrigerator, shelving, cash register, and accounting system, are all of the most up-to-the-minute models, and the careful arrangement of stock and equipment gives the store an enviable appearance of modernized prosperity. The big feature

A REAL GROCERY

THE big feature in this store is lots of bin capacity and shelf room. Bins for bulk goods in bins of varied capacity of 20 lbs. to 200 lbs., also for all lines of fancy cakes. Lots of counter room, compact stock with quick service. Attractive display in bins, shelves and show cases, with lots of floor space for a waiting buyer to go about inspecting goods, without appearance of being crowded. A large ice box for cooling and ample office accommodation is the outstanding feature of the fixture installation, all supplied by us. In scales and other accessories it is a model equipment and one of the best stores for service in the province.

No. 3 Bevel Display Counter, full depth, large capacity roller bin of patent self-closing type, 35 lbs. to 135 lbs. capacity.

Are you disappointing and losing customers by slow service during rush hours, lack of display or excessive handling of goods on open display? You certainly cannot afford to lose customers, so why not install Walker Bin Fixtures. Less work and worry for you, pleased customers, less wages, lower overhead expense.

It is Easy to Picture Both the Improved Sanitary Conditions and the Increased Attractiveness of Your Store When You Have Installed a

SHERER CLEAN FOOD COUNTER

COMPLETELY MANUFACTURED IN CANADA BY CANADIAN CRAFTSMEN FROM CANADIAN MATERIALS

SELL GOODS BY DISPLAY

Thirty or more lines are always before the eyes of your customers tempting them to buy, as they actually see the goods. One user said it was like putting thirty clerks to work showing goods—only he didn't pay them a cent in wages. That's what you can do—put thirty clerks to work for you—showing profitable goods.

STOP LOSS BY SPOILAGE

Every line in the thirty is tightly sealed against dust, dirt, vermin, mice—everything, including the nibblers—which cause you to lose many dollars in wastage every year. You can't afford to throw goods away any time, much less in these days of high prices. With a Sherer Clean Food Counter you can save what now you are wasting.

THEN THERE ARE OTHER GOOD REASONS.

Think of the time you and your clerks will save by having thirty or more of your most rapidly moving lines concentrated in their thirty feet of space. Put your popular canned goods on the shelves behind your Sherer Counter and your scale on the counter and you'll increase the efficiency of every salesman at least 50 per cent.

Stop the shrinkage of dried fruits by showing them in a Sherer Counter. You are losing money every day you do not have a Sherer Counter in your store. You can make your Sherer Counter pay for itself out of its earnings. Write to-day, then, for Booklet 57, which tells you all about it. Stop losing—start saving—to-day.

Dear Sir:

Three dollars a dozen – a quarter on every package – is what there is for you in the handling of Liberty Brand Malt Extract and Hops. We say "handling" because we will undertake to do the selling; – put it on your shelves and MOVE IT OFF.

During 1922, tons and tons of Liberty Brand are going to be sold in every dry province of Canada. It makes a delicious beverage – not an apology – and its sale and use is legal all over the country. Each package, besides the Malt Extract, contains patent corks for bottling and a little bag holding the hops – not extract – the hops themselves.

And, besides making an all satisfying, cheering and invigorating drink, Liberty Brand is Nature's own tonic for growing children and absolutely drugless. A huge quantity of it will be sold for this purpose alone, and still more for cooking uses. It is an important ingredient in Malt Loaf, Malt Pudding, Gingerbread and a hundred other things.

All of these uses we are going to advertise to your public in your own papers as soon as we have the necessary distribution. This is what we mean when we undertake to do the selling for you. Our money is not going to be wasted by half-doing the thing. Every one of your customers shall know every use of Liberty Brand, and for every package you pass over the counter (clean and easy to handle) you will make 25¢ and a friend who will only be too glad to come back to you.

Your own Wholesale Grocer can supply you.

Cordially yours,

CANADIAN GROCER

Vol. XXXVI. TORONTO, MAY 5, 1922 No. 18

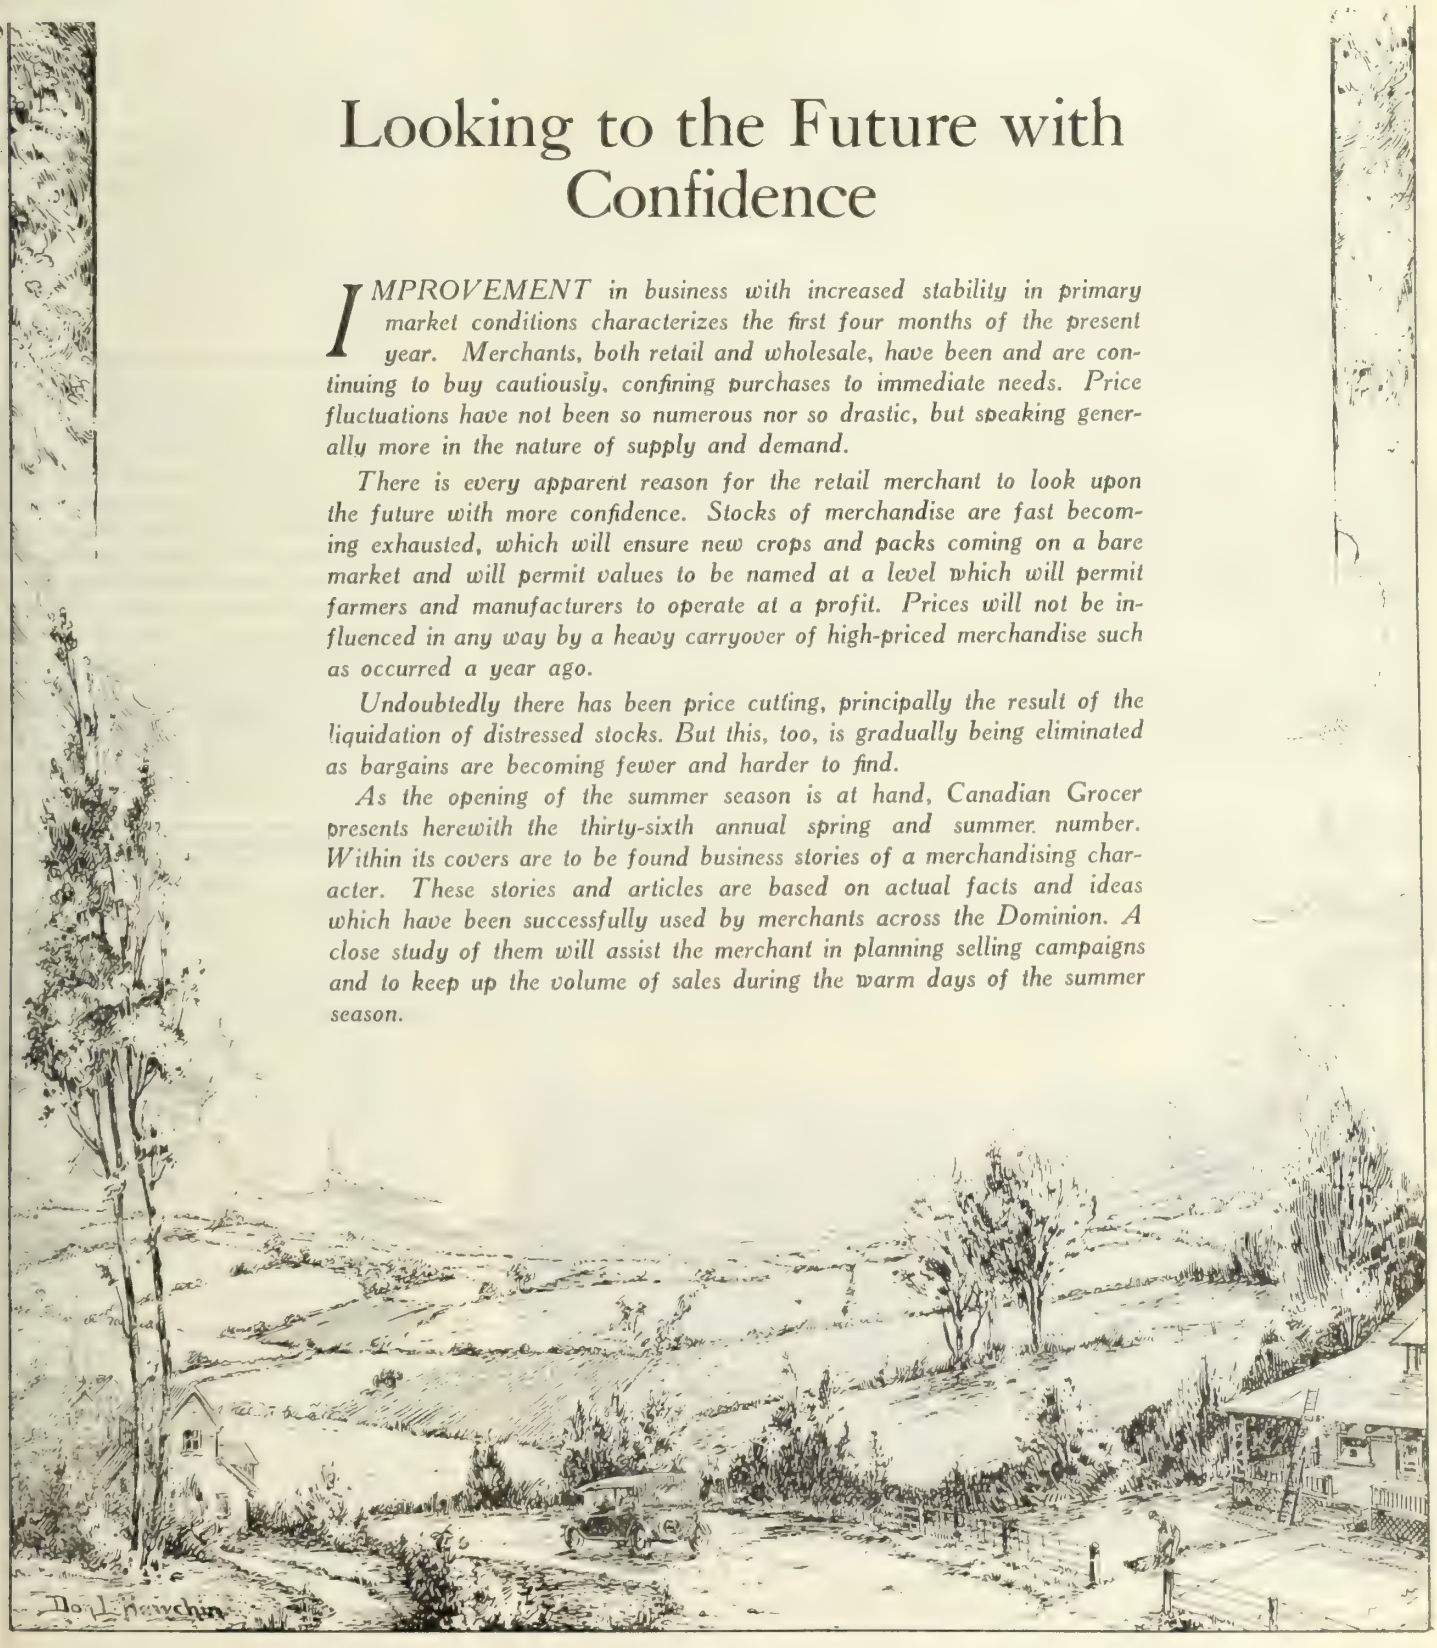
Looking to the Future with Confidence

IMPROVEMENT in business with increased stability in primary market conditions characterizes the first four months of the present year. Merchants, both retail and wholesale, have been and are continuing to buy cautiously, confining purchases to immediate needs. Price fluctuations have not been so numerous nor so drastic, but speaking generally more in the nature of supply and demand.

There is every apparent reason for the retail merchant to look upon the future with more confidence. Stocks of merchandise are fast becoming exhausted, which will ensure new crops and packs coming on a bare market and will permit values to be named at a level which will permit farmers and manufacturers to operate at a profit. Prices will not be influenced in any way by a heavy carryover of high-priced merchandise such as occurred a year ago.

Undoubtedly there has been price cutting, principally the result of the liquidation of distressed stocks. But this, too, is gradually being eliminated as bargains are becoming fewer and harder to find.

As the opening of the summer season is at hand, Canadian Grocer presents herewith the thirty-sixth annual spring and summer number. Within its covers are to be found business stories of a merchandising character. These stories and articles are based on actual facts and ideas which have been successfully used by merchants across the Dominion. A close study of them will assist the merchant in planning selling campaigns and to keep up the volume of sales during the warm days of the summer season.



"It is the Quick Turnover that Always Makes Money for the Grocer"

James Bros., Grocers at Biggar, Sask., Build up an Enormous Trade From a Very Small Beginning—Turnover Last Year Was in the Neighborhood of $194,000—Now Constructing a Larger Store

"IT IS NOT the profit that can be made on one line of goods, but it is the quick turnover that makes money for the grocer," remarked Mr. James of James Bros., grocers at Biggar, Sask. This business has grown from a very small beginning until the last year it was necessary to build a new store in order to accommodate the ever increasing trade. The new building has been constructed right alongside of the old one, and the accommodation that is now provided makes this store one of the finest in Western Canada.

The rise of the James boys in the business world of the West is an interesting story. Nine years ago these boys left a small town in Ontario near Ottawa, taking an excursion train to the West, with the result that they made Biggar, Saskatchewan, their destination. They went into the West with the express purpose of going into business, and consequently lost no time in building a store. They built it themselves. It was not long after their arrival in Biggar that they were occupying their new store and carrying on business. Their first stock was valued at four hundred dollars. "Last year our turnover was $194,000," remarked Mr. James, in contrasting the present condition of the business with the beginning.

Buying Right and Quick Turnovers

"We have worked hard to get where we are today," he continued, "but the effort has been worth while. We have built up a big business, and the secret of our success has been in buying right, and selling at one price, reasonable and fair to all. We have always made it a point not to carry any stock that could not be moved quickly. There is one thing that we insist upon and that is a quick turnover of all goods. We will not keep goods lying on the shelves for any length of time. Everything must be disposed of, within a reasonable period. We have found that it is the only way to conduct business successfully. We turn our stock at least once a month. Situated as we are in a farming community, we find it necessary to give credit, but we do not suffer in any way as a result. In the nine years that we have been doing a credit business, our losses because of inability to collect, have never been more than one half of one per cent. As far as we are concerned, we have no intention of adopting a cash and carry plan of doing business. It would not work out in our community, and we are quite satisfied with our present way of carrying on. We are not afraid to continue to give credit. We send our accounts out at regular intervals, some people getting theirs fortnightly, others monthly, and others a longer time."

Big Turnover in Fruits

James Bros. look upon fruit sales as the feature of their summer trade. Large quantities of fruits as they come on the market, are sold in this store every summer. From the time it starts to come in until the season ends, this firm is selling fruit. They buy all their fruits direct, getting a car lot at a time. "We have no difficulty in disposing of a car of fruit," Mr. James remarked. "Let the people know that you have it, and you will have no trouble selling it. Fruits represent a quick turnover and at the same time a very good margin of profit. We have worked up a big fruit business out here and must say that it is well worth while."

Supplying Steamships, Sailing Vessels with Groceries

SUPPLYING steamships and sailing vessels has been a feature of the grocery business of McAlary & Co., 34 Douglas Avenue, St. John, N. B. This firm has been in business for the past thirty-five years. "In the past four years we have supplied 187 steamships and barks," Mr. McAlary, manager of this store, told a representative of Canadian Grocer. "These boats are usually supplied monthly Others are away for longer intervals and consequently their buying is heavier. A great many of the boats we used to supply were lost in the war. It is now some years ago since we first realized what an opportunity there was for a grocer in going after this trade. I venture to say that we are among the first merchants doing the largest business of this kind in our city. Nothing but the best goods are bought for these vessels. Nothing of an inferior quality can be disposed of. After a boat has once been supplied, it is much easier to restock, but there is keen competition for this business and it will not come to the grocer, unless he goes after it."

Illustrating the store of McAlary and Co., St. John, N. B.—this firm specializes in supplying steamships and sailing vessels.

Largely a Credit Business

This firm caters to a splendid class of trade in St. John. "Our business is done largely on a credit plan," Mr. McAlary stated. "Many of our customers have dealt with us for years. We send our accounts out monthly always on the same date and our customers pay promptly. We do not have any difficulty in collections. Our losses as a result of giving credits are practically nil. I

Selling Canned Goods by the Dozen

Montreal Grocer Gives Discount of Ten Per Cent. on All Sales of Canned Goods in Dozen Lots—Must Not Force Goods Upon a Customer—Housekeepers Use More When Supply on Hand is Larger

By Staff Correspondent Canadian Grocer

MONTREAL, Feb. 21.—In a prominent place in Grant's Grocery store 705 St. Catherine St. West, Montreal, there is a large sign which reads "Buy Your Canned Goods by the Dozen and Save 10 per cent." Each of the clerks has been instructed to feature this in their sales, at the same time being careful not to force an order on a customer or run any chances of overloading that customer with something that they cannot or will not use. Mr. Grant is firm on that one point, that in the endeavor to increase sales that goods should not be forced upon a customer. In speaking to a Canadian Grocer representative about this point, C. L. Grant said, "It is a bad thing to sell something to a customer that will stand on the pantry shelf for some time or to load them up with an order that will keep them out of the store too long a period. In that way sales are often lost, since every time a customer comes into the store they inevitably buy something that they had not calculated on buying. It is therefore a good plan to see that they come as often as possible to the store.

"At the same time, when a customer has a number of cans of goods in the house they are naturally going to use more than if they had to go out and buy a can every time they wanted one. We had this point illustrated to us in the sale of asparagus tips recently. We made a special sale of the line. Offered three cans for special price. We sold 45 cases but the effect did not stop there. Our sales in general increased. The people took home the extra cans. They had been looking upon the line as a delicacy before. With the three cans on the shelf it simply because a canned vegetable and they used more. Our sales in this line since that time have proven that the people are using more.

A Discount Pays

"Now we are offering a ten per cent. discount on all canned goods bought by the dozen, and it works splendidly. There are a few cases where it would be unwise to press or even suggest such a sale, for instance, to small families who could not readily use up that amount. But even in those cases we find it pays to make the special offer acceptable. On any canned goods bought by the dozen, we offer a ten per cent. discount on the retail price. For instance we will sell two cans of peas, two of tomatoes, two of corn, one of peaches, one of plums, two of pineapple and two of strawberries and give the discount on the total.

Where it Pays the Grocer

"The discount certainly pays us. When we are able to buy in larger quantities we can get a better price ourselves, particularly when we have the cash to do it. Then, two, we find that when the people buy in larger quantities they use more. In another way too it benefits. We are able to show the people that prices are coming down, that we are doing our best to bring down the cost of living and the public appreciate it. This idea cannot be overworked. Anything within reason that the grocer does to increase sales or his turnover will pay him well. Not only are we doing it with canned goods but with bottle goods too, we are going to make a special offer on quantity lots."

Display is Important in This Grocer's Trade

FROM THE accompanying photograph it will be at once evident to the reader that N. Trimble, the proprietor of this store at Evanson and Westminster avenue, Winnipeg, believes in a proper display of his stock. In conversation with a representative of Canadian Grocer, Mr. Trimble expressed his belief that attractive displays always meant an increased turnover. Mr. Trimble has been in business in Winnipeg since November first 1919, and in that period he states that his trade has steadily grown, until now it is of very gratifying proportions. Before starting in the West, he conducted a general store at Munster, Ont., for twelve years.

"We have a large store here," he told Canadian Grocer. "We have plenty of space for attractive displays of merchandise, and we pay a great deal of attention to the arrangement of goods, so as to make them as inviting as possible. Coupled with interior displays we also use our windows to advantage, and show something that we want to get moving. We change our window frequently. It is always an aid to an increased turnover of the particular line displayed."

Mr. Trimble conducts his grocery business on a credit basis. He gives the service of delivery, and it is on the principle of giving the very best service possible that he has built and is still expanding his trade. It is his opinion that the great majority of people like their goods delivered to them, and to many the service of credit is just a matter of convenience. His losses as a result of giving credit are the very minimum.

This store is splendidly equipped, as will be seen from the accompanying picture, equipment that facilitates service, and renders it not only easier to serve people but to keep goods in the very best condition.

Showing the attractive interior of the store of N. Trimble at Winnipeg. Attractive interior displays are part of the policy of this merchant.

Keeps Waiting Customers in Happy Frame of Mind with Music and Saves Expense of Extra Help

Store of People's Providers, Ltd., in New Westminster, B. C., is Unique Establishment—Has Lunch Room, Also Rest Parlor for the Ladies—Is Now Operating a Grocery on Wheels That Carries All the Time a $1,500 Stock of Groceries—Has Everything the Store Has

By Staff Correspondent Canadian Grocer

NEW Westminster, B. C.—As a grocery store, the People's Providers is one of the largest on the Coast. The store extends right from Columbia Avenue through to the next street, Front Street, with a width of about fifty feet. As Front Street is one floor lower than Columbia, the Front Street entrance serves as a receiving and shipping door for the basement which runs the full length of the store and is used as a warehouse for grain, flour, feed and other heavy commodities.

On the main floor, at the Columbia Street level, are grocery, fresh meat, cured meat, fresh fish, and delicatessen departments. A gallery extends over the rear half of the store, and accommodates the office, a lunch room, and rest room for ladies. At this lunch room about fifty girl students from the "tec" and high school sit down every day to have their lunch. They are made very welcome. They are not under any obligation to so much as buy a cup of coffee unless they wish. And when they have finished their lunch they may amuse themselves. A dainty sitting room with mirrors, running water, etc. for the benefit of the women shoppers is another feature.

An Orchestra Saturdays.

On Saturdays from 7 till 9.30 a small orchestra plays on the balcony. According to Mr. Rattray, this music saves the store some wages for extra help. "If it were not for the music, many of the immense crowd that enters the store on Saturday night would become impatient and leave, unless we hired extra help for those hours. As it is, they see that all the salesmen and salesgirls are working as hard as they can, and as it is pleasant to listen to the music, they are content to await their turn."

Utilizing Wall Space

Another modern feature of this store is the manner in which the high wall spaces have been used to beautify the store as well as sell the goods. The ceiling of the store is very high, which makes the space on the walls above the shelving unusually large. Space along one wall has been allotted to various manufacturers. One tea company's gardens are represented in one space. One local soap manufacturer has another. A B. C. pickle manufacturer has the banks of the Fraser River depicted, with fields of "cukes" and onions in the foreground. A national flour miller has a splendid farm scene with threshing in operation depicted as an incident in the manufacture of his particular flour.

These large paintings were done by a local scenic artist, and they contribute a very bright and attractive note to the appearance of the grocery store. There is still space of about one hundred feet on one wall and Mr. Rattray is making arrangements with several other manufacturers who want to advertise in the store. Mr. Rattray's lease is for five years, and he undertakes to leave the paintings up during that time.

All along the top of the shelves are cards as used in the street cars, which serve to promote the sale of dozens of the articles on the shelves.

The most outstanding departure from the usual methods of extending the store's trade is undoubtedly the "grocery on wheels" which is operated as an "extension department" of the People's Providers. This truck, fitted up as a small grocery shop, covers the various suburbs of New Westminster according to a publicly posted schedule and sells any and everyline that the main store sells, right at the householder's door.

When this nomadic cash and carry store approaches a neighborhood the whole district is apprised of this fact musically. On the exhaust of the truck is a set of pipes operated from the driver's seat, on which can be played many distinctive calls and simple tunes. It is

"Public Wants More Service Than the Cash and Carry Plan Provides"

"THERE are great changes under way in the grocery business." So stated N. S. Rattray, the manager of the People's Providers, New Westminster, B.C. "I do not believe that the cash and carry business will persist. We operated on that plan for two years, and our observations agree with our own experience, that what the public wants is more service than the cash and carry plan provides for.

"I believe that the grocery retailing method that will be the thing in the coming months and years is cash and delivery chain stores in centres of dense population and, linked up with them, 'Groceries on Wheels' serving the suburban and rural districts.

"Our experience in New Westminster showed us that the customers need and wish delivery. When we maintained a strict policy of 'no delivery' we found our best and most desirable customers going to the service stores for their flour, sugar, etc., in order to have them delivered. Each time this happened our hold on the balance of their trade was jeopardized. A year ago now, we arranged for delivery on the following basis—a parcel or order of groceries is delivered to any point in the city of New Westminster for 10c. We pay an independent delivery man 25c an order. In other words, our patrons may have any purchase delivered at their homes, and we will pay the big share of the cost of this service. It works out splendidly. It cuts out the little trivial deliveries that are the bane of most grocers' lives, and has the effect of making the customer make most of her purchases here, to have all the packages delivered at the one cost."

Every selling effort that is worth while is carried out in the store of the People's Providers at New Westminster, B. C., the interior of which is illustrated above. Facilities for showing goods to the best possible advantage, it will be noted, are everywhere apparent.

"Leaders" Arouse Interest and Help to Increase Turnover

A. F. Fishman, Halifax, N. S., Takes Over Business That is Badly Run Down and Puts New Life Into it—Advertising Has Been Important Factor in Stimulating Sales

HALIFAX, N. S.—"If a man can sell something that is intangible surely he can sell groceries that a person can see when buying," is the argument of A. F. Fishman, one time insurance agent in Halifax, N. S. It was with this idea in mind that Mr. Fishman resigned his position that was paying him a good salary to take over a grocery busness in one of the poorer sections of the city. The store that Mr. Fishman now operates was formerly conducted by a man who paid absolutely no attention to the store, and as a result, was selling the magnificent amount of thirty to forty dollars worth of goods per week. On the day preceding Christmas 1920, the gross sales for the day were seventy cents. This is an example of what had to be overcome before the business could be made a success.

This store is located on the corner of Gerish and Creighton streets in Halifax, and within fifty yards of the store there are four other grocery stores. At the time of this interview, Mr. Fishman had been in business less than ten months and yet had built this business up from a complete wreck to weekly sales of six hundred dollars.

Does Not Want Credit Business

"If I wanted to give credit I could add one thousand dollars per week to my sales," said this man, "but that kind of business is not wanted in this store. When we order goods we are expected to pay for them in a reasonable time and when due, but in giving credit to your customers you get paid for them when they feel like doing so and many times you don't get it at all. The only kind of business that pays is that which you are paid for and I would much rather have a smaller turnover and get my money than do big business and have to worry continually as to whether I was going to have enough money to pay my bills. This has been the policy of the store and there has been no breaking away from it."

The first thing Mr. Fishman did when he took over the store was to start advertising. He uses hand bills and has found that they have been very effective. The bills are arranged in an attractive manner and each week there is offered some "special" that will be sure to interest the people. This man is a great believer in offering leaders for the week-end.

Children are accorded every courtesy in this store, and parents send them frequently to do their shopping.

As the hand bills have a wide circulation there are a number of people who are too far away to come for their goods, but call by telephone and have them sent. The telephone trade is being invited by the store and it is steadily increasing. This is a better class of trade and the people want better goods and are willing to pay for them.

As a result of a try-out, all goods on the shelves are now price marked, and the system is working well. The people do not have to ask the price of anything they are interested in, and there is only one price to all.

KEEPS WAITING CUSTOMERS

stated that this musical signal can be heard for a mile. A complete refrigerator is incorporated in the truck. All bulk goods are carried already weighed up and parceled in convenient quantities but a full range of branded goods is carried. "With this kind of a store we cannot afford to let the public think that our assortment is limited," said Mr. Rattray. "The cash customer expects exactly what he asked for, and as far as we can manage it, we aim to give him exactly that.

"The store staff utilizes many minutes that would be wasted, by preparing the packages for the truck in advance. A fifteen hundred dollar stock of groceries is carried in the truck all the time."

GAINING GOOD-WILL

A merchant who realizes the value of catering to all juvenile customers, provides small-change envelopes. He has a supply of these envelopes—in size like pay envelopes. On the front he has printed the name of his store, Whenever young children make purchases which require the return of change he inserts this loose change in one of the envelopes and in this way serves his customers a good turn—and incidentally advertises his store.

The Summer Tourist is a Free Spender

Many Grocers Situated in Lake and Country Regions Look Upon Tourist Trade in the Summer as a Big Opportunity to Increase Turnover—The Adams Grocery, Ltd., Lindsay, Serves a Large Colony in the Kawartha District

FOR THE grocer who is situated in a lake region adjacent to a summer resort colony, there is no better way to stimulate summer trade than to go after the business of the cottager and the camper, spending their vacation in some one or other of Canada's numerous watering places. Canadian Grocer has from time to time told of the enterprise of various merchants who have realized a big turnover in business of this kind. Wm. Hanna and Sons from their store at Port Carling, Ont., cover in a big way the summer residents in the Muskoka chain, with their two supply boats fitted out as completely as any grocery and provision store. These boats calling at the various islands bring to the residents everything that a modern grocery provides. Peter Hutchinson, of Bracebridge, serves summer cottagers too in the Muskoka region. He reaches them chiefly by means of the telephone, and on one Friday night alone he has sold as much as eleven hundred dollars' worth of groceries over the telephone. W. E. Preston Co., Ltd., of Midland, Ont., send out a supply boat from there every day serving the summer colony in the Georgian Bay district. Many other grocers in many other parts of the Dominion could be cited, who look at trade of this kind as a feature of their summer business.

Is A Good Spender

The tourist on his summer vacation whether at his cottage in his own favorite lake region, or a canoe trip, a motor trip, a camping and fishing expedition, is a good spender, buying his supplies with a fair amount of abandon. It is the grocer's opportunity to give him service, to provide him with those commodities that have a particular appeal on an outing of this kind.

The Adams Grocery, Ltd., of Lindsay, Ont., serves a large summer colony at Sturgeon Point and at Pleasant Point, two places that are very popular in the summer months. These resorts are situated in the Kawartha Lake region and are not far distant by boat from Lindsay. The summer population of Sturgeon Point numbers about 800 and at Pleasant Point around 400. Other nearby resorts are Greenhurst and Thurstoria. Many Torontonians summer at these places. There is also a great influx of American visitors.

Boat Service Helps Trade

"There is a splendid boat service to these places," J. E. Adams of this firm told a representative of Canadian Grocer on the occasion of a recent visit. "Thus it is an easy matter to deliver goods to these summer residents. The boats make two trips daily and in the busiest season there are three trips. Our opening orders for people at the beginning of the season are on a large scale. By giving service and attention to the resorters we aim to maintain a continuance of these orders throughout the summer. Many of the cottagers at Sturgeon Point now have telephones. Orders are phoned into us and we deliver the goods to the boats and the boat is met by the customers. I myself live at Pleasant Point and each day when I come in to business, I bring a number of orders, that are filled and returned on the boats."

Big Turnover in July and August

Discussing this summer business, Mr. Adams remarked that it is well worth while. This store turned over more than thirteen thousand dollars' worth of goods in both July and August of last year. This was somewhat lower as compared with the same months in the preceding year, but this, Mr. Adams stated, was due to the declines that have taken place in prices, rather than to any decrease in volume.

Buys A Good Class of Goods

"The summer cottager at the lakes buys a good class of goods," Mr. Adams stated. "Jams sell well with us during the summer season, particularly with this trade. The better grades of canned goods, olives and foods that are easily and quickly prepared, sell well. Of course the tourist season is a good time to push the sale of picnic lines. Our town is a good picnic centre, and our people are constantly taking little picnic trips either by boat or car, during the summer months. Last summer one line that we sold a great deal of with the summer residents was grape juice. Our turnover in this article was greater than ever before, and largely because we put selling effort behind it, suggesting it to the visiting tourists."

Service To The Customer

In developing a summer trade with the lake residents, Mr. Adams pointed out that one of the chief factors contributing to its success, is that of service to the customer. The tourist appreciates any little attention in the way of looking after his order, care in packing it, willingness to secure something asked for, but which may not be in stock at the time requested. "A great many of our customers write us from Toronto, or from whatever city where they may happen to live," Mr. Adams continued, "at the beginning of the season, giving us their opening order, and asking us to have it ready for them on the day of their arrival. We have customers who have followed this plan season after season. Attention to orders of this kind has meant much to the maintenance of this business, and also to the growth of it. Customers tell their friends about the service at our store, and after all, in trade such as this, a satisfied client telling her friends is our best investment."

Forgetfulness

Diner—"Where's my change?"

Waiter—"Dar ain't no change; dat's mah tip."

"But I didn't tell you you could have it."

"Oh, dat's all right, boss. Ah's fo'-getful mahself sometimes."

The store of the J. E. Adams Grocery Ltd., as illustrated here is replete with equipment that makes for quick and convenient service.

This store is doing a business averaging $11,000 per month and in the summer it goes higher as a result of summer resort trade.

Has Turnover of $11,000 Per Month

Must Sell Goods and Sell All the Time in Order to Get the Turnover—Clerks Must Get Behind the Goods and Sell Them to the Trade—Farm Customers Buy in Large Quantities

WITH a turnover averaging around eleven thousand dollars every month, and in the summer months running into much higher figures, the Adams Grocery, Ltd., Lindsay, Ont., is selling goods and selling all the time. Located on Kent Street, the main thoroughfare of this thriving little town, this grocery which is a combined grocery and meat business, occupies a splendid position by way of getting the people in the shopping centre. Having a large staff of clerks they are busy all the time, doing something more than merely taking orders. The grocery windows too are made to show results combined with the selling efforts of the clerks.

A Heavy Farm Trade

"Our business is very good at the present time," J. E. Adams told the representative of Canadian Grocer. "The last two Saturdays have been the heaviest for a long time. We have a very heavy agricultural trade here, as well as a good town business. We give the service of both delivery and credit, but taken as a whole our credit business is all good. With our farm customers we sell in large quantities, and aim to do so. It is not an infrequent occurrence with us to sell a farmer 500 lbs of sugar at one time or 500 lbs. of flour. But the special lines in the grocery trade sell better with the townspeople."

Introduces New Lines

Discussing the question of introducing new lines, Mr. Adams told Canadian Grocer that provided they were convinced that a new article on the market was sufficiently worth while and of proved quality, they did not mind getting behind it with real selling effort. "But the article must have merit before we will recommend it," Mr. Adams declared. "Recently a new washing powder came on the market. It is a good thing, and we got behind it, when we first stocked it. It has taken well with our customers and we are getting repeat business on it all the time now. Just the other day one of our customers brought into me an empty can that had contained a certain brand of table cream. She stated that a friend in the city had sent her a tin of it to try. She liked it and wanted to get some more. We have never had it, but will endeavor to get it on this customer's recommendation. We will then suggest it to other customers, and create a demand for it. It should be a good line to sell in the summer months.

100 Cans of Prepared Milk at a Time

"We sell a good deal of canned milk and cream in this store. While we had not this one line that the woman requested we have other brands that sell well with us. We have one customer who buys one hundred cans of prepared milk at a time."

At the time of the visit of the Canadian Grocer representative the Adams Grocery, Ltd., was showing a certain brand of canned pineapple. A lot of it was piled on the counter, and the clerks were suggesting it to customers. "We have been selling quite a lot of it the past few days," one of the clerks told the Grocer, "and we are going to keep right at it until we clean it all up."

Coffee sales run into good figures in the course of a year at the Adams Grocery. "An electric coffee mill certainly increases one's turnover in coffee," Mr. Adams remarked. "Our coffee sales run a little better than fifty pounds a week. We consider this very good in a town of this size. We grind the coffee as the customer orders it, and we think this is an advantage that helps the sale."

Labor Saving Equipment

In the way of equipment the Adams store has all the devices for facilitating service to customers, as well as saving the time of the clerks. Dust proof pivoted bins, computing scales conveniently situated, showcases, all contribute to the splendid equipment of this store. "We have had these patented bins now for some years," Mr. Adams stated. "We would not be without them. They keep stock in the very best sanitary condition, always clean and fresh. From the standpoint of display they are also valuable, and add to the attractiveness of the store."

EXPORTS OF COCOA FROM BAHIA

Shipments of cocoa from Bahia, Brazil, for 1921 amounted to 672,200 bags of 132 pounds each, as compared with 144,900 bags during 1920 and 822,600 bags during 1919. The United States, the principal buyer, took 305,100 bags of the 1921 crop, against 402,200 bags in 1920 and 26,900 bags in 1919. Germany, the chief distributing point in Europe for Bahia cocoa, was second, with 159,700 bags, against 106,200 bags in 1920 and 2,500 bags in 1919.

"Summer Campers Buy Only the Best"

Grocers in Lakefield, Ont., Find Their Biggest Turnover in Jams and Some Lines of Canned Goods in the Summer When the Tourist Season is in Full Swing—Opening Orders for Cottagers Are Substantial Accounts

"WE HAVE been filling orders for summer residents on the Kawartha Lakes for the past eighteen years," P. Spence of Spence and Sons, grocers at Lakefield, Ont., told Canadian Grocer recently. "Some of these people have been sending us their orders every year during all that time. They write ahead telling us when they plan to come through, and we have their orders filled and at the boat for them.

"A number of these summer residents deal with us throughout the season, and we send up their orders on the boats, but of course the stores at various points on the lakes are more convenient and supplies are wanted in a hurry. However the boat service is very good, and orders sent down in the morning can be delivered in the afternoon. Very frequently they are telephoned in to be delivered to a certain boat. We fill a great many orders in this way. This business is all good and orders are substantial, some of them running up as high as thirty dollars. As a rule the opening orders range between twenty and thirty dollars."

Spence and Sons have a grocery business with an annual turnover of around sixty thousand dollars. This firm carries a stock of between six and seven thousand dollars. "We turn our stock about ten times a year," continued Mr. Spence. "We aim to carry only the best goods on the market. It used to be, in jams for instance, that we could sell the compound varieties, but we can't any more. People want the pure jams. Our biggest turnover in jams is during the summer season. We sell a lot of it to the cottagers at the lakes. They are our best customers for jams. In a village such as this most of the people in it as well as in the farming communities, preserve their own supply of fruits and jams, so the demand for jams is not so great with us as with grocers in larger places. However we dispose of a good deal of it to the tourists, and they all want the best."

Marmalade or Jam In Every Order

Discussing an opening order for the summer tourists, Mr. Spence remarked that in addition to the regular list of staples required, it would be an unusual order that did not include a jar or two of marmalade or jam. Canned goods in case lots sell well with this class of trade, and canned beans have a particularly heavy inquiry from camping parties as well as the cottagers."

Good Trade In Candies and Tobaccos

A feature of Spence & Sons' business is the trade they have built up for candies and tobaccos. "We carry a high-grade chocolate, and the demand for the same is good at all times," Mr. Spence stated. "Our sales average about 100 pounds in six weeks. These are bulk chocolates of course, and in addition we sell a number of the boxes. In tobaccos our turnover runs about $150. per month. We buy tobaccos in such a way as to take advantage of all discounts. We believe this is the only profitable way to make a tobacco trade worth while. Both candies and tobaccos are good sidelines for a grocer, and can be made to show a very fair profit."

"This is a thing that has saved us a lot of work," remarked Mr. Spence as he placed some accounts in an account register, on the end of the counter. "We have had this account register for some time, and it certainly has been a great labor-saver for us. It simplifies the keeping of accounts, and we would not now be without it."

"A Dozen Tins of Pork and Beans"

"In practically all campers' and tourists' orders there is an item that reads 'a dozen tins of pork and beans' and sometimes more," stated J. A. Porter of Lakefield, Ont., in discussing his summer trade. He sells a lot of merchandise of this kind to people at the lakes. "In fact canned goods of all kinds sell well in the summer to the campers and cottagers," he continued. "Here is a line of coffee," he added, as he lifted a tin of it, "that we sold a great deal of last summer. It seemed to take particularly well with the people at the lakes. Canned milk sells very well here too. Our sales of jams to the people in our villages are not heavy, but we have disposed of a fairly heavy supply to lumber camps during the past winter. We will sell a fair amount of jam too in the summer with the campers at the lakes."

The Best Seller

Pointing to a certain brand of peanut butter on the counter, Mr. Porter remarked, "That peanut butter is the best seller with us. We get repeat business on it all the time, and our people it seems will not have any other. It has a flavor all its own."

Mr. Porter has a bakery in connection with his store, and makes all the bread, cakes and other confectionery of this kind that he sells. He does the chief trade in these lines in Lakefield, and this fact is a stimulus to his grocery trade as well.

SOUR ORANGE CROP OF SPAIN

The 1921-22 crop of sour oranges in the provinces of Seville and Cordoba will be some 220,000 half chests (a half chest contains 143 pounds of fruit). About 160,000 half chests will be exported. Part of the fruit not shipped will be used in the local manufacture of orange pulp. Most of the oranges exported from Seville go to England where they are made into marmalade, but the price of sugar in that country has been so unstable that British importers did not make large purchases of oranges this season. Very few fresh oranges are shipped to the United States but the American demand for orange pulp in 10-pound tins is greatly increasing.

A realistic display of soft drinks can be arranged in this way. Most of the window space is occupied by large baskets of fresh fruits. Directly in front of each basket is a smaller basket filled with soft drinks and non-intoxicating wines, made from fruit represented in the neighboring basket.

Sells 1,000 Gallons of Gasoline Monthly

Merchant in a Country Store Has Gasoline Pump and Finds it is Profitable in the Summer Months—Motorists Stopping to Replenish "Gas" Buy Other Lines as Well—Sells Ice Cream and Soft Drinks

GROCERS and general store merchants situated in country places are finding it profitable to sell gasoline. The number of merchants who have installed gasoline pumps in front of their stores is increasing. The motorist travelling through the country is pretty sure to have to replenish his supply at some stage of the journey and the country grocer realizing that fact is making money out of it.

Frank Magee with a general store at Fowler's Corners has a gasoline pump, and last summer sold on an average one thousand gallons of gasoline each month for a period of five months. Fowler's Corners by the way is really only the crossroads, and has not reached the status of even a village. Mr. Magee's store is situated half way between Peterborough and Omemee, on the road to Lindsay. It is located on a much travelled road, particularly in the summer months, for the reason that tourists motoring to Pidgeon and Sturgeon Lakes travel this way. These lakes are part of the Kawartha chain and are very popular with people from Toronto and American cities. Realizing the possibilities of selling gasoline to the hundreds of motorists who pass this way, Mr Magee's predecessor in business installed the gasoline pump and tank. Mr. Magee took over the business a year ago, and last summer was more than gratified with the sale of gasoline. "While we are situated fairly near the larger centres, we felt we sold a very fair amount of gasoline last year," Mr. Magee remarked to a representative of Canadian Grocer. "I think the average motorist appreciates the fact that he can replenish his tank at a wayside store such as this, as very often he does not think of gasoline until he is almost out of it. It does not entail much added labor on the part of the merchant, while it attracts people who usually make other purchases when stopping to get more "fuel." In this section of the country a great many of the farmers now have their own cars. Knowing that they can buy their gasoline here, they very frequently buy their groceries too. In fact one of the chief advantages of having a pump, is that it usually sells more than gasoline.

The gasoline pump in front of this grocery store is not only profitable for the grocer but provides a real service in the country to the motorist.

Sells Ice Cream and Soft Drinks

"Last summer motor parties passing this way very frequently stopped whether wanting "gas" or not. We sold ice cream and soft drinks during the summer months, and our store was a convenient place to stop for a cool drink or ice cream cone. All our ice cream is sold in cones practically. Our sales of ice cream and soft drinks are a feature of our trade in the summer, and people in cars are our chief customers. Chocolate bars we also find are a popular sale with the motorists."

A Camping Ground Nearby

Pigeon River is not far from where Mr. Magee's store is located. This river the past few summers has become popular with a number of people who motor there to camp. In fact it is reached only by motor car or horse and vehicle. Last summer, Mr. Magee stated, there was quite a number of campers who spent their holidays on the banks of this river. They drove in from Peterborough and some came from Toronto. On their way through they purchased considerable of their supplies at Mr. Magee's store. "We intend to go after this trade again this summer, and knowing something of the lines that appeal to campers, from our experience of last year, we will be able to render even better service than before. It is business well worth cultivating, and the campers finding that they can purchase their supplies near at hand, appreciate this fact, provided they can get the things they want. We are going to aim to give them that service which we believe will bring them to our store, and which will save them the trouble and inconvenience of going farther away for their "eats."

Suggesting Other Lines

"These campers who chiefly come in cars buy their gasoline at our pump. It is in suggesting groceries and other supplies to them, that we have gained their trade. The number of campers is not large but the trade is worth while, and the number that comes will grow from year to year. One friend tells another."

Mr. Magee's store is situated in the centre of a prosperous farming community, and of course the bulk of his trade is with the farmers. In this connection he does not wait for business to come to him, even though he is in the country. He has two trucks, and is able to give the service of delivery where it is necessary, and to go after orders as well. He maintains his stock in good supply at all times, enabling him to give his customers the goods they want, or if not just what they ask for, something just as good.

Regains Lost Coffee Trade and Creates A Bigger Demand Than Ever

Merchant Who Finds His Coffee Sales Are Slipping Away From Him Adopts Methods That Mean An Increased Turnover and a Reputation for Good Coffee That Means Profit Well Worth While

MANY merchants have found that by putting a little extra effort into selling, or by adopting a different method of selling, that often a line which has been lying dormant and sales have been dragging along more or less indifferently for several months and even years, have pulled that line or article out of a rut and eventually made their store headquarters for that particular article. Not only that, but the merchant by so putting a little more energy into the otherwise indifferent seller has got more fun out of the business and incidentally built for himself a reputation in his neighborhood for selling a very fine article.

Take coffee for instance. every merchant sells more, some less, but as Canadians are not heavy drinkers of coffee and as the natural tendency for many people is simply to drink coffee occasionally, some merchants have got into the habit of letting coffee go by the board. Now the study of coffee is one of the most interesting subjects, and the merchants who are building a big trade for this line are in a position to do so simply because they are putting a lot of thought and study into the game. The flavor, freshness and method of grinding are the three principal things that are constantly being watched. Then, too, they are everlastingly suggesting it to their customers, by advertising in the daily papers, selling talks over the counter and some have even found it profitable to place the coffee mill in the window, allowing the odor of the freshly ground coffee to permeate the air of the store, and a whiff of which caught by the passerby on the street is enough to tantalize the appetite, and cause him to drop into the store for "some of the same."

How these merchants have first started to build a profitable business for coffee, are all interesting stories and none perhaps more so, than Robert Kirby's of Sarnia, Ont.

A few months ago Mr. Kirby came to the conclusion that the little coffee trade he had was slowly dropping away. He was selling, what he thought, a pretty good quality which was being ground as sold, which in the ordinary working of things should have given satisfaction. Now Mr. Kirby is a sound believer in female clerks, and he is certainly to be congratulated upon the efficient staff he maintains. But there was one place wherein the ladies fell down, and that was in the grinding of the coffee. Sometimes this coffee reached the customer, very often in a "cracked condition" instead of in small evenly ground or pulverized particles which in itself is really part of the building of a coffee trade.

Now the lady clerks were not wholly to blame for this condition of affairs, because Mr. Kirby had an antiquated hand mill which he had purchased some ten years ago for the munificent sum of ten dollars. To operate this mill required much muscle and who could blame anyone from shirking such a job if it was at all possible?

Instals an Electric Mill

The first thing then was to get rid of this antiquarian, which Mr. Kirby proceeded to do. He installed an electric mill, which by a simple turn of a button and a twist of another he was able to grind the coffee coarse, fine or pulverized according to the desire of the customer, and while the coffee was grinding, not by man power but by the energy produced by the "white coal," he was in a position to give his entire attention to the customer, serving more promptly and leaving more time to be devoted to the selling of other articles.

The next thing was to select a blend of coffee which would give satisfaction and then plan an advertising campaign, to create a demand for his coffee, all of which Mr. Kirby proceeded to do. The first was done by careful testing of several blends until one was decided upon for flavor and which Mr. Kirby was convinced would give entire satisfaction. An advertising campaign was planned and in this instance it did the trick.

An Invitation to Every Customer

The plan was to send out to every customer and others in the neighborhood of the store an invitation to try Kirby's Coffee. A card size as two ordinary post cards, but perforated in the center, so as to fold over announced that "this coupon is worth five cents to you in purchase of one pound of coffee." The other side said something about the kind of coffee and the new electric mill. A reproduction of one side of this card appears here. Six hundred and fifty cards mailed out in lots of fifty each. The second day after the cards went out, twenty-one came back to the store and on the second day forty-eight and at the end of six weeks seventy five per cent. of the cards were redeemed. To promote the making of good coffee in the homes, Mr. Kirby put in a stock of coffee percolators. "These percolators cost us ninety-five cents each and we sold them with one pound of coffee for three dollars," said Mr. Kirby. "In one week we sold twenty-four such combinations and in two months we sold more coffee than we were previously selling in a year."

GOOD MORNING.

Was Your Coffee Good This Morning?

Perhaps the coffee was alright, but was not properly ground. It makes a lot of difference how it is prepared.

That's why we have installed a new Electric Coffee Mill to give you the best service.

With Coffee freshly ground, you get all of the strength and flavor. Just tell us what kind of a pot you are using, and we will show you the difference between the old way and the Electric way of grinding to please.

Yours very truly,

Bright Colors Stimulate Buying

Every Way One Turns in the Beaver Grocery in Vancouver Attractive Displays Greet The Eye, Offering Suggestions of Appetizing Foods—Make the Customers Feel That They Must Have The Article, And When Well Displayed It Usually Means a Sale

VANCOUVER.—While it is a fact that groceries are an absolute necessity and most groceries are bought merely because it is unavoidable, yet, it does not conduce to free spending to have the business of buying food too "drab."

Sam McElroy, in the Beaver Grocery, Granville Street, Vancouver is proving every day that it pays to make the buying of groceries rather a pleasant experience. The Beaver Grocery is one of the most colorful shops on the street. Mr. McElroy believes that bright colors stimulate buying. He believes that dullness means "gloom" and "gloom" is not conducive to good business. Most of the manufacturers are putting attractive, colorful labels on their wares these days. Mr. McElroy floods his store with light till every varnished label glows, and every glass sparkles. Every way that a customer can turn, attractive bright displays scintilate with pleasing suggestions.

Displaying Mincemeat

On one display, a large globe contains bulk mincemeat, while grouped around it are several different packaged mincemeats for those who prefer their mincemeat in packaged form. "Everybody doesn't lose his taste for mince pie, because he ate too much at Christmas time," says the merchandiser. "Many made their own mincemeat at Christmas time. That is all done now. The appreciation for mince pie lingers long after that Christmas batch has been eaten up. I catch a good many customers like that, who are influenced to buy by that attractive display."

When the customers see the golden light reflected in the display of bottled honey, they can almost taste how good it would be on their hot biscuits. Then while they are still thinking in terms of honey, their glance is arrested by t adjoining pyramid of honey in the comb, and many a sale is consummated right there. All the shelves in the Beaver Grocery are narrow. They are shallow. They only accommodate bottled pickles and such like two deep. The entire shelves can be kept clean and well filled without overstocking.

The counters, the tables, the countershelves are all ornamented with neat, pleasing groups of appetite-teasers. Maximum displays in every direction coax open the purse of every customer who enters the store under the mistaken impression that all they wanted was a pound of butter, or a tube of rolled oats.

Looking more carefully to see just what contributes to that festive, cheerful appearance, one might think it was the few vases of bright colored carnations, or poppies (artificial) that set off some of the displays, or maybe it might be the glossy, vivid green of the few palms here and there. Really though, it is the artful combination of all these things, and the ample illumination, that makes the store a cheerful looking place to deal at. Someone has said that when nature painted the oranges and lemons and grapefruit with those bright, warm, cheerful colors, she knew what colors would make them most attractive.

Three Displays of Fruits

If that be true, then Sam McElroy is letting nature's color work for him full time. When Canadian Grocer visited the Beaver Grocery there were no less than three separate displays of citrus fruits. One at the front of the store, one at the back, and a display, flanked by the rich green of fresh vegetables, in the window.

It was noticed, that the stock that graced the shelves in front of the serving counter, and the groceries dressed at either end of this counter and all around the front of the store were not staples. They are not the things that most people ask for first.

Favored Places for Specialties

His most valuable space is used to sell the extras, the Fancy Groceries, the things that carry a margin. Of course he sells oatmeal, and bread, and milk and flour and butter. Lately he has taken to putting his butter up under the Beaver label. There's only one place in the city where "Beaver" butter can be obtained. And its the finest butter McElroy can buy! But it is honey, and marmalade, and pickles, and olive butter and bottled jams, etc., that shine under the brightest lights in the most favoured places.

The impression that Canadian Grocer carried away from the Beaver Grocery is one of cheeriness. People these days seem to run to the "bright lights" even to buy their prunes.

SUPPLYING STEAMSHIPS

think the reason so many merchants lose money with credit accounts is because they do not keep close enough watch on these accounts and follow them up as they should. They let them run too long, encouraging carelessness.

At the time of the visit of the Prince of Wales to Canada and during his stay at St. John, Mr. McAlary had a model of the famous Quebec bridge set outside the store, and floating beneath was a replica of the Lusitania. It was a splendid reproduction of both and caused a great deal of favorable comment.

Selling Oranges by the Dollar's Worth

J. McTaggart & Son, Vancouver, B.C., At The Present Time Are Selling Three Dozen Oranges For a Dollar, and Find Most Sales Are in This Way—People Will Almost Always Buy as the Grocer Suggests, As In This Instance of The Oranges

(By Staff Correspondent Canadian Grocer)

VANCOUVER.—"If you quote oranges by the dozen you are not likely to sell by the case. If you quote three for a quarter, you will likely sell a quarter's worth at a time." Thus Ernest McTaggart & Son, Ltd., expressed a fundamental truth in price marking, and in the McTaggart store this has been proved to be absolutely true.

At the present time the window is dressed with oranges and the large and attractively lettered card reads, 3 dozen for $1..00. Mr. McTaggart is selling most of his oranges by the dollar's worth. If he thought that a householder could handle a case at a time, it is certain that they would have been quoted by the case.

"It is an astonishing thing to me," said Mr. McTaggart to Canadian Grocer, "why so many retail grocers will permit their stock to get so low that they can be asked for so many articles which they are not able to deliver. Just this morning a lady bought a couple of pounds of fresh cranberries here. She said to me that it was quite a treat to be able to get what she needs. She had tried several stores along the street, and we were the only ones who, in answer to her request for cranberries, handed out the cranberries instead of an excuse. There is no reason that I can see why any store could not stock a few pounds. I mean, of course, any city store, so close to so many wholesalers as any city store is. A merchant can only make a profit on what he has for sale. When business is slack, it seems a pity to pass up any that is offered, no matter how small."

The writer noticed a display of that old fashioned rock candy on the counter. That simple confection that many folk considered the only wholesome candy for small children. Mr. McTaggart said that two or three people asked if it was procurable so he sent an order for a shipment. It has sold splendidly. The margin is worth while. As far as I have ever noticed, that is the only rock candy for sale in the city. This is not intended as a suggestion that every retail grocer should order some cranberries and rock candy, but these two commodities in the McTaggart store are examples of the hundred and one articles that an alert merchant will use to swell his day's totals. Items that might not amount to much loss if dispensed with, but on the other hand, add to the totals if sold.

This firm puts bright ideas into practice and profits thereby. They do not sit and wait for business to come to them, but use attractive window displays to advantage, following up the same with letters to different classes of patrons. Reference has been made in previous issues of Canadian Grocer to these letters but a word of repetition will not be amiss. "It is surprising how this personal appeal to the people meant, in almost every instance, a sale," remarked Mr. McTaggart. "A letter to customers makes them feel you are taking a real interest in their buying, and indicates that you are anxious to give pleasure and satisfaction. We have a list of business men, and the idea occurred to me that if they had a box of apples in their offices they might eat more, and hence my letter to them. The idea appealed and we greatly increased our sales of these special boxes.

"In following up first orders, we have found that a letter to the woman often results in a new and permanent customer. In this way, we show that we are anxious to cater to their needs, and the person in question feeling that you are ready and willing to give them real service invariably wants to deal with us. Service is always appreciated and this little letter to prospective customers is just one of our ways of extending our trade. The majority of people like attention of this kind, and it spells profit to the merchants who give it.

"We have greatly increased our sales of tea and coffee through this medium, Building a reputation for good coffee and tea is good business, and getting the people into your store to buy these two lines, it is invariably the case that an order for general groceries can be secured."

In every bag of fruit that leaves the McTaggart store there is dropped this little slip featuring the fruit basket suitable for a "bon voyage" gift. There is no passenger boat leaving this port that does not carry a few of McTaggart's baskets of assorted fruit, gifts to departing tourists from thoughtful friends left behind. McTaggart features the fact that any baskets so bought are delivered to the boats and trains.

This Plan Increases Fruit Sales Ten Times for This Merchant

R. Balish, grocer, 507 Wyandotte St. E., Windsor, Ont., has found at least one way in which to increase the sales in fruit. Since adopting this plan Mr. Balish claims that his fruit sales have increased at least ten times.

On the right hand side of the store as one enters is the candy display case and immediately following this is the section given to the fruit. In a space eight feet long Mr. Balish has built a set of display counters in the form of stairs and on this he very carefully arranges his better lines of fruit. Below this, on the floor in front, are two rows of bushel baskets containing apples and vegetables. Care is always taken to see that the fruit and vegeables are carefully washed and made as attractive as possible so that they present at all times the nicest appearance. The display is changed around frequently so that one does not get tired of seeing the same things each time on entering the store.

One window in this store is always given over to the display of fruit and vegetabes. "It pays to always have these lines displayed to the best possible advantage," said this merchant.

As a means of increasing the turnover in oranges, J. McTaggart and Son, grocers in Vancouver, advertised them three dozen for a dollar. The "stunt" has been a success and the above illustration shows the window display that was used at the time.

Fruit Sales Run High in this Store

Sells All the Early Arrivals in Fruits and Vegetables—Turnover in These Lines Has Been as High as Two Thousand Dollars per Month—Show a Good Profit and Increase Trade in Other Groceries

SUMMERSIDE, P. E. I.—After being in the grocery business in this place for a period of more than thirty years, W. A. Ching awakened one morning in 1915, to see his store and a great many others on the main street, being rapidly wiped out by fire. When the smoke and fire had died away, Mr. Ching realized that his life efforts had been pretty well destroyed, and all that was left was the insurance he carried on his stock. Although not by any means a young man, he was not dismayed, and immediately set about looking for a place to start again. This was not easy to find, and after much endeavor the only suitable location that could be procured was that of an alleyway between two other stores, and on this Mr. Ching put up his present store.

Reputation for Quality

Here he has been located since the fire, and here he has built up a reputation for carrying the very best that can be procured, in the way of fruits, vegetables, and general groceries. Mr. Ching makes a practice in the early spring of having the first fruits and vegetables that come on the market. Through display and selling effort he has greatly increased his turnover of these lines. He aims to be the first to handle them. New lettuce, green onions, fresh rhubarb and fresh strawberries are all stocked, and in his town Mr. Ching has created a demand for them, the result being a profitable sideline for him.

Attract People to Store

"These specialties such as the imported fruits and vegetables, out of season," he told a representative of Canadian Grocer, "attract people to the store, and not only do they sell themselves but they invariably sell other lines as well. There is a demand for this high-grade stuff in this town, and the people I believe will buy the best quality every time, if it is put before them. Before I started to sell these early fresh fruits and vegetables, out of their season, it would have been thought impossible. The people look to me for them now. Sales of fruits and vegetables have run as high as two thousand dollars per month with me, and while this is not an average, the turnover is always large, and altogether very gratifying."

Catering to Picnic Parties

Picnics in the summer months, and parties in the winter, are catered to in the Ching store, in a way that means profitable returns. "For picnics and parties people will always buy the high-class groceries," Mr. Ching remarked. "Picnics are popular in our district in the summer, and by suggesting those lines that have a particular appeal for affairs of this kind, the grocer can almost always sell. We find it a good plan during the summer to inquire of our customers if picnics are being arranged. Keeping in touch with customers in this way, allows an opportunity to sell those lines that are popular for outings. We can always dispose of fancy lines, at this time, as everyone wants to have something out of the ordinary for their own picnic."

Big Turnover in Candy

Candies too of a first-class quality are carried by Mr. Ching. Turnover of candy looms large in the aggregate, during the entire year, in this store. A large and varied stock is always carried, and Mr. Ching emphasizes the importance of always having it fresh and attractively displayed if sales are to continue. It is on quality and the fact that it is fresh that a grocer must build his reputation for candy, Mr. Ching declares, and on these factors any success in candy selling is dependent.

The best cigars and tobaccos are stocked in the Ching store.

Window Displays Get Results

Great results are obtained by Mr. Ching from window displays, and it is through constantly keeping fresh goods, and changing the display that the peo-

"May Have Bananas by Dozen But Must Pay for Them by the Pound"

Vancouver Grocer Who Undertakes to Sell Bananas by the Pound Naturally Had Some Arguments on His Hands But the System Works Fine Now—In Fruits and Vegetables the Price is the Last Consideration

VANCOUVER, B. C.—"When we first started to sell bananas by weight, we naturally had some arguments on our hands. People said they preferred to buy them by the dozen. We pointed out that we would always be happy to sell them by the dozen, but that we would only charge by weight, and that they would only pay for what they got. If the children were to be given bananas, the purchaser could choose small ones if she liked; or for slicing she could choose the large ones, and in either case she would fare just as well." So spoke Mr. Dean, of the Morrow and Dean Grocery Store, 7th and Yew Streets, Vancouver.

Now Eggs the Same Way

"Now we have started the same system in regard to eggs. Or what amounts to the same thing. They are graded by size and weight to conform to government standard grades, and though sold by the dozen, the weights per dozen increase with each higher grade so the consumer is really paying by weight. We have never had to convince any of our customers of the advantage of buying our eggs graded ac cording to this plan. They just naturally pick out the ones that are going to suit best the purpose for which they are required, and pay what is asked. There are some folks, as you know, who always imagine that the eggs they get are smaller than the ones they saw. Graded, they are all the same size, and if large ones are preferred they may be had and paid for in proportion.

Prices in Line With Markets

"There is not anything like the same disposition to haggle about prices that was evident a few months ago. Of course all our prices are in line with the present markets, but our trade—mostly family trade—are now satisfied that our prices are right for the class of goods they want, and price is far less frequently mentioned.

"In fruits and vegetables, of which we sell large quantities, the price is the last consideration. The quality must be above reproach—given the quality, the order is assured.

"In a business such as ours," said Mr. Dean, "where our trade is all family trade, it is possible and we have been fairly successful, in engendering a certain loyalty to our store among our customers. This is a real and tangible asset—usually called good will—and it is well worth working to achieve."

Bottle Their Own Vinegars

Morrow and Dean bottle their own vinegars. The vinegars are bought in barrels and bottled in sterilized bottles—then labelled with the store's advertisement. In speaking about the complaints about certain vinegars that forced them to bottle their own, Mr. Dean said: "It seems incredible to me that so many manufacturers—and in all parts of the country—will build up a demand for their various lines by producing a good quality article and good merchandising methods, and then make the colossal mistake of imagining that they can rest on their laurels, stop their promotion work and start substituting, and adulterating and diluting. The line has never been handled in a grocery store that will gather sufficient momentum in any number of years of good manufacturing, to carry it along in the face of deteriorated quality. Some lines stagger farther than others after they have been 'knifed' from within—but the dealer is quick to note the falling off of favor that follows a reduction of quality standards. A line where the quality is maintained will respond to the grocer's co-operation."

The windows of the Fourth Avenue branch are used to display the special lines that the store makes a feature of from time to time. Special care is used in dressing windows each night, as the well lighted windows receive considerable attention from the crowds attending the Picture Theatre a few doors east.

One Against Another

In speaking of advertising Mr. Dean mentioned the tendency among some publishers of weekly papers such as abound in the suburban districts of every city as well as in all towns of any size. Having got one merchant started to advertise his groceries, making specials for Saturday at slightly re-

Sells Carload of Fruit in Two Days

Fruits Constitute One of the Best Revenue Producers in the Summer Months—J. A. Carroll, Lindsay, Ont., Believes That the Selling Power of His Windows Cannot be Overestimated—Location is an Important Factor

"OUR WINDOWS are strong selling factors we find," J. A. Carroll grocer at Lindsay, Ont., declares. "We keep them dressed all the time." Judging from the one that was in at the time of a recent visit of the Canadian Grocer representative, the Carroll store certainly has some very fine windows. It was a window of olives, and the arrangement was indeed an artistic one. Against a background of white the green of the olives in bottles contrasted splendidly, showing up to advantage, and bound to attract the eye of the passer-by. Speaking of the results of this window the staff of this store all declared that they had sold more during the time that it was in, than for some time past.

Location an Important Factor

"Our location on the street certainly makes our windows very valuable to us," Mr. Carroll added. The Carroll store is on the main street, almost at the corner. Just around on the other street from that on which the grocery is situated, Mr. Carroll has a tobacco shop. The two departments are separate and complete in themselves. In fact it is only a few years ago that Mr. Carroll took over the grocery store. He has for many years been in the tobacco business in Lindsay, and the opportunity having presented itself, he decided to enter the grocery field. Consequently he moved his tobacco stock to its present location, which is really part of the main grocery store. The two are connected and it is not necessary to go outdoors to move from one to the other. "Location counts for a good deal in the success of any business," Mr. Carroll believes. "Traffic in this town is heaviest just here at our corner. Consequently the selling power of our windows cannot be underestimated. We would be losing a valuable aid to sales effort, if we neglected to give them the attention that we do. We have had ample proof that people are frequently attracted to our store by our windows."

Display Throughout Store

From the standpoint of arrangement of stocks in a store, the Carroll grocery represents one of the finest that it has been the privilege of the Canadian Grocer to witness. Extreme cleanliness is everywhere apparent. Shelves, counters, showcases, and the tops of them, all display goods in a way that seems to put them right before one. Everything carries a price ticket. No matter which way one turns it would seem that some particular line draws the attention, and yet it is not one line but numerous articles that catch the eye. Attractive price cards—some large, others smaller—are on everything. Mr. Carroll is an adept at the work of lettering cards, enjoys doing them, and believes that they are extremely valuable in promoting sales. "I think a display that tells the price is the only one worth while," he remarked. "People like to know what they will have to pay for the commodity that is before them. We carry only the best goods that are obtainable. We have a patronage that demands the best, but our customers like to know the prices of things, and the price cards tell them, often when it is not convenient for us to do so. We have built our business on a reputation for quality and service, and we cannot afford to carry lines that do not measure up to our own standard of quality. Thus in seeking to increase the sale of any line or in introducing a new article on the market, it is a foregone conclusion of course, that its quality has been proved. Otherwise we would not be handling it."

A Car Load of Fruit in Two Days

As soon as the fruit commences to come on the market, Mr. Carroll starts to sell it. "It is a profitable line in the summer months, and we sell a lot of it," he stated. "Of course in the spring months we are handling the imported fruits and vegetables too. We have a clientele that will buy this early stuff, and we find it profitable to carry. But as the season advances and the Canadian fruits are available we are very busy filling orders for strawberries, raspberries, peaches, plums, grapes, etc. Last year early in September we sold a carload of peaches, plums and pears in two days. We consider this pretty good business. It represents a quick turnover and a very good profit. In disposing of this large quantity of fruit in such a short time, we had to concentrate on the selling of it. We telephoned our customers, advertised it, and had it piled in front of the store. Right through the summer we are selling fruits, and from week to week our turnover runs into large figures. We look to our fruit business at this season as one of our best revenue producers."

MAY HAVE BANANAS

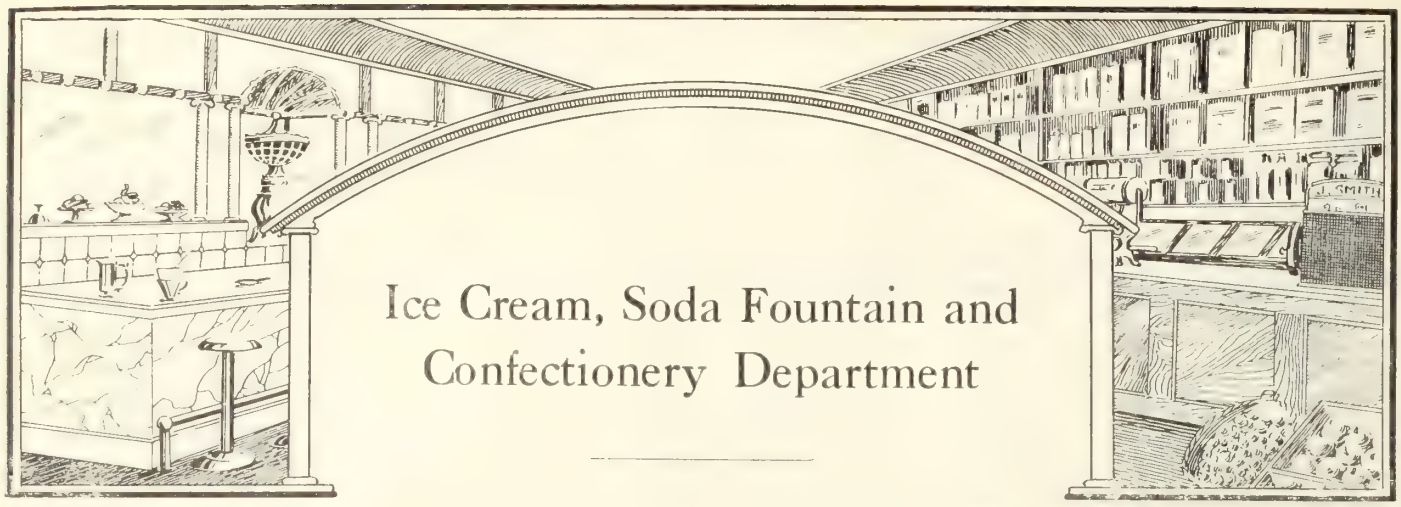
duced prices, some publishers will go to the competitor and induce him to come in too, and naming lower prices still, to "beat out" the other fellow. This was done in the Kitsilano suburb of Vancouver, some time ago, when one such publisher had four merchants pitted against each other—all losing money. Morrow and Dean have ceased to advertise items and prices and stress their service, courtesy, promptness and the quality and freshness of their stock.

The centre illustration is that of the interior of the J. A. Carroll store in Lindsay, Ont., on either side of which are Easter window displays—The art of window display in this store has been highly developed, and great results are obtained from the same.



Ice Cream, Soda Fountain and Confectionery Department

Ice Cream Increases Sale of Biscuits

This Grocer Finds an Ice Cream Department a Profitable Sideline—Tried it Last Summer for the First Time But is Already Preparing for a Bigger Season This Year—Sells Other Lines

JOHN SPEER, a grocer on Hunter Street East, Peterborough, Ont., sold ice cream in his store last summer for the first time, in the history of his grocery business. He is so well pleased with the success attending his efforts in the first season that he is going to sell it again this year, and hopes to do very much better than in his first summer. All conditions considered, his turnover in ice cream last summer looks good, while to many merchants situated in much bigger and busier districts than where Mr. Speer is located, it might not seem very large. He stocked ice cream only in the months of May, June, July, August and the first half of September. In fact he did not commence to handle it until the 24th of May. An ice cream and confectionery parlor is close at hand, but now having established the fact that he is in the ice cream game for all time, he is anticipating a much bigger season in 1922. During this period around two hundred gallons of bulk ice cream were sold, in addition to seven hundred bricks.

Has Special Department

The Speer store is a spacious one. It was to utilize some of this space that Mr. Speer conceived the idea of opening an ice cream department. One half of the store is used for this purpose. This spring he has had made a latticed partition which will divide the ice cream parlor from the store. It has been painted white and green and lends attraction to the store. Several tables make ample accommodation for persons wishing to partake of ice cream in the store.

"Is ice cream a worth while line for the grocer?" the Canadian Grocer representative asked Mr. Speer.

Sells More Biscuits

"It certainly is," he replied. "There is no reason why the grocer should not handle it as well as the druggist or anybody else. There is no doubt about it but the fact of carrying ice cream sells more groceries for you. And once people know you have ice cream, they are going to drop in for a dish. When in the store they frequently buy other things, and when you get them buying one thing you can usually sell them something else. One instance of this is in the sale of biscuits. We find that our selling of ice cream has increased our sales of biscuits. Last summer we sold more biscuits than ever before. People on their way home from business dropping in for a brick of ice cream to take home for supper invariably bought a pound of biscuits to go along with it. In this way we greatly increased our sales of biscuits. We have the biscuit cabinet standing near the entrance to the ice cream parlor, and we believe this fact also tends to enhance our sales. We also carry a certain line of cakes and in the summer when the sale of ice cream is on, we notice a great difference in the number of cakes we sell."

A Good Location

The Speer store is so located as to get considerable "catch" trade, and this fact Mr. Speer believes will mean heavier sales of ice cream this coming summer. People who reside in that section of Peterborough known as East City, have to cross the river to go into the main business district. Mr. Speer's store is situated just at the end of the bridge, and consequently there is a great flow of traffic in front of his store. Consequently it is an ideal location to get the passing customer, and now that his ice cream department has become fairly well established he is anticipating bigger sales than ever.

Mr. Speer is only one of the many grocers who are finding it profitable to carry ice cream. He has gone after this trade, by providing accommodation for the serving of ice cream in his store. This fact alone, he declares is responsible for a better grocery trade. From the standpoint of profit, according to the statements of grocers who are selling it, ice cream shows a good margin. It provides the enterprising grocer with a sideline that should be developed to the full extent of its possibilities.

Sells 5 Dozen Ice Cream Bars in a Day

Sales of This New Ice Cream Bar Are as High as Eight Dozen in Robt. Kirby's Grocery in Sarnia and This Turnover Was in the Month of February—Bricks Average 36 Daily

AN ICE cream novelty which is meeting with much favor among the retail grocers who sell ice cream is the chocolate coated bar of ice cream. This latest piece of confectionery looks like an ordinary bar of chocolate but in reality it is a bar of ice cream dipped in chocolate. It is wrapped in tinfoil, packed in ice and taken care of in the same manner as bricks of ice cream.

Merchants who have been selling ice cream for several years claim that this novelty has been the means of greatly stimulating sales of ice cream during the past winter and from the experience of some of these merchants, the chocolate coated bar of ice cream is doing a great piece of missionary work in making ice cream an all year 'round article.

"When this ice cream bar was first offered to me, I looked upon it as somewhat of a joke, and ordered the first lot more for that reason than anything else." stated Robert Kirby, Sarnia, Ont. "I have changed my opinion now, however, and consider ———— bars as the means that have greatly added to our sales of ice cream during the winter months. The demand is increasing every day for the bars and not only that, but we are selling more bricks than ever."

"Do you thing the ice cream bar will supplant the chocolate bar?" asked Canadian Grocer.

"I do not think so," replied Mr. Kirby. "It is true that the children buy the greater portion of them, but then we have 'grown-ups' too, who buy several to carry home and who serve them on the table as an individual dessert. As far as taking some of the business on chocolate bars and candy, our experience does not point that way, as our sales of candy have greatly increased. My experience so far is that these individual portions of ice cream, will help ice cream sales. Our sale of ice cream bricks during the past winter is a good deal larger than a year ago."

Since this article was written, Robert Kirby has commenced alterations in the interior of the store. He is planning to increase business at the soda fountain by moving it from the center of the store to a location near the front entrance. Another section measuring six feet in length is also being added to the soda fountain.

The Kirby store is equipped with an ice cream fountain, but it is only during the summer months that it is in operation. Ice cream, however, is handled all the year round, but for home consumption only. During the month of February, sales of the ice cream bar averaged five dozen each day with the exception of Saturday when sales would run eight dozen, making a total of over 1,500 for the month. The sale of ice cream bricks averaged thirty-six daily or a total of nearly 900 pint bricks for the month.

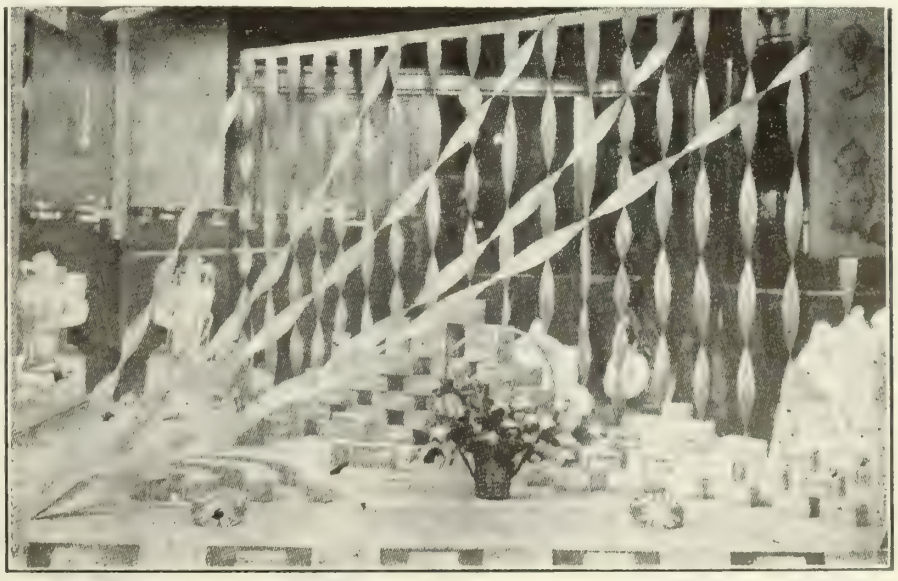
The ice cream fountain is situated about half way down the length of the store and on one side opposite the regular grocery counter. This fountain has all the features that are to be found on the fountains of a larger type and is an attraction to the store when it is in full operation during the summer months. The cost of installing this fountain was paid from the net earnings of ice cream during a period of five weeks.

PROHIBITION CONTINUES A BOON TO SALE OF CANDY

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Men who make and sell candy, ice cream and soft drinks scarcely will join or support any movement for the abolition of prohibition in this country, for to do so simply would amount to working against their own best interests. Prohibition has given a wonderful impetus to this line of business, as shown by official figures, issued by the U. S. Bureau of Census.

In 1919, for instance, when war-time restrictions were applied, the production of sweets and soft drinks jumped from less than one-half billion dollars for the preceding year to $637,214,000, and for 1920, with real prohibition in effect, the total ran well over the billion mark, and was of even larger proportions this year.

There is no question that this line of business has profited immensely as a result of the changed conditions brought about by the prohibition rule. There is evidence on every hand that people largely have increased their consumption of sweets, ice cream and soft drinks since the passing of the old-fashioned saloon.



Here is an ice cream window display that is very easily and simply arranged. Twisted crepe paper, a basket of flowers, a few dozen ice-cream-brick receptacles and a couple of glasses of foaming (the foam being made out of batting) sodas, are all the "properties" required.

These Grocers & General Merchants are Finding Ice Cream Increases Sales of Other Lines

THAT the selling of ice cream is not wholly confined to the larger centres is evidenced by recent interviews with retail grocers in several of the smaller towns. These merchants find ice cream a ready seller yielding a splendid profit and enticing people to trade at the store who eventually become regular customers for foodstuffs and other lines carried by the particular business.

While perhaps the greater majority of merchants in the smaller towns throughout the Dominion are only handling ice cream to carry home, many of them are operating regular soda fountains, while some have even gone further and have set aside a certain portion of their store as an ice cream parlor, serving practically the same fancy drinks and ice cream creations as are to be found at the fountains in the larger cities.

The town of Rockwood, Ont., has a population of 600 inhabitants. There is one grocery store and two general merchants. One of the latter stores is conducted by R. B. Richardson.

"I just started in the ice cream business on the second of February, of this year, handling the chocolate coated ice cream bars and the bricks," remarked Mr. Richardson to Canadian Grocer. "For the month of February we sold forty dozen of the bars and seventy-six bricks. During March we sold fifty dozen bars and ninety-four bricks. This was absolutely new business and my customers think it is great to be able to get ice cream during the winter months especially in such a small town as ours. One Saturday night near to closing time, a party telephoned for some ice cream bricks. These people were not regular customers and as they live about a half a mile from the store, they motored for them. After purchasing four bricks of ice cream, they made other purchases amounting to $3.57. Since then they have become regular customers. We deliver to them twice a week on our regular delivery days in their direction. It was the ice cream that made them regular customers. This summer we expect to handle a very large quantity of ice cream and although we have not a soda fountain, we are figuring on putting one in."

Deloraine, Man., has a population of about 800 in habitants. A. H. Atkinson is a retail merchant in that town who apparently is grasping every opportunity to induce people to become regular customers of his store. One idea that has brought many new customers is his ice cream department. He operates two soda fountians besides an ice cream parlor in connection with the grocery business. He has found that the selling of ice cream not only shows a satisfactory profit in itself but it encourages people to come into the store and who finally become regular customers. In Mr. Atkinson's experience ice cream also cements a closer friendship with the regular customers and holds the ones who are inclined to drift. He related such an incident when a woman remarked "I have no fault to find with your store or your service, I just drifted away, but your ice cream brings me back."

Another small town is Brodhagen, Ont., having a population of around 100. Querengesser & Diegel are retail grocers in that town who commenting upon ice cream as a profitabe line to carry remarked "we find that ice cream helps to increase sales on other lines and we find it a profitable business, even in a small village such as this. We sell quite a lot of beverages also."

Some Suggestions in Recipes for the Fountain

Coffee Syrup

Take three ounces of prepared coffee which dissolves instantly in either cold or hot water, three quarts of water and from 3½ to 4½ pounds of sugar. Mix the coffee first with one quart of cold water, then add two quarts more of water and sugar and stir until the sugar is dissolved.

Honey Boy

Pinapple syrup, 1 pint, vanilla syrup 1 pint, lemon syrup 1 pint, strained honey 3 drams, fruit acid 2 fluid drams, soda foam 4 fluid drams. Serve 2 fluid ounces in glass and fill with carbonated water.

Nectar

Pineapple syrup 1-3 gallon, strawberry syrup 1-3 gallon, lemon syrup 1-3 gallon, oil bitter almond 6 drops. Color deep red and add one ounce soda foam.

Fruit Frazzle

Fruit syrup 2 ounces, powdered sugar 1 teaspoonful, cracked ice 2 ounces, carbonated water sufficient. Mix syrup, sugar and ice with about 9 ounces of the water, stir, strain into glass containing slice of pineapple, peach, orange or lemon, and a few selected berries or small fruit.

Grape Orange

Lemon syrup 1 ounce, grape juice 1 ounce, orange water ice 1 scoopful. Dispense in 12 ounce glass, shake and fill the glass with carbonated water. Decorate with a slice of lemon and orange and serve.

Nougat Special

Put a No. 16 mound of strawberry ice cream into a fancy stem glass and pour over it a ladle of nougatine dressing. Then add a disher of lemon ice cream (vanilla may be used, or in summer a water ice) and a little more of the dressing. Fill the glass with whipped cream. Drop a few pistachio nuts into the whipped cream. Pecan halves can be used, but the effect is not quite so pleasing.

Pay-day Sundae

Into a fancy stem glass put a ladle of bittersweet chocolate dressing. Add a spoonful of chopped pecan nut meats, 1 of walnuts and a No. 10 mound of vanilla ice cream. Fill nearly full with whipped cream and place a No. 20 mound of chocolate ice cream on top.

Tulip Sundae

Take a six-inch fancy flat glass dish and place on it a large (ten to the quart) cone shape dipperful of vanilla ice cream. Then pour a small ladleful of crushed orange around the edge of the ice cream and over

An Ice Cream Parlor in a Grocery Store That is Attractive

Hugh Stephens, Collingwood, Ont., Has a Pretty Little Refreshment Department in His Store—Finds He Sells More Groceries Since Having Ice Cream

"IS THE above photographic reproduction indicates, there are few more attractive ice cream parlors in towns of similar size as that of Hugh Stevens of Collingwood, Ont. Previous reference has been made to this refreshment department, which is to be found on the very same floor with the grocery section of Mr. Stephen's store. When Canadian Grocer devoted space in a previous issue, to tell of Mr. Stephen's entry into the refreshment game, it was to relate something of his success in maintaining business in his ice cream department during the fall and winter months. The article told how he kept it open the year through, serving hot drinks to those who desired them, in the cold weather, but for the people who in spite of climatic conditions still enjoy a dish of ice cream or a soda, the same could be obtained in the Stephen's store.

A word might not be amiss even in repetition in describing this ice cream parlor. It is very attractively fitted out, the two colors, cream and a pretty shade of blue being used throughout. The furniture, chairs and tables are also in these shades. The whole effect is very pleasing to the eye. A partition running part way to the ceiling separates the refreshment room from the grocery, and both open into one, at the front of the store. As one enters the main door from the street, to the left are two long silent salesmen for the display of high grade chocolates. The shelves to the rear are also filled with candy boxes. One passes it on the way to the ice cream section, it being on the same side of the store, but it attracts customers for either department as it is well up to the front.

The appointments of the place throughout are decidedly "chic." Pretty little menu cards in the same colors are on each table. The glassware and silver is good, everything combining to give an air of refinement and exclusiveness to the establishment that is extremely distinct.

Mr. Stephens is another grocer who, having gone into the ice cream business, finds that it has increased his sales of groceries. It is his experience right along, that the fact of having ice cream means a better turnover of other merchandise. People coming into the store purposely to have a dish of ice cream are reminded in passing along the grocery counter that there is something in groceries that they need, and forwith ask for it. "Perhaps it is a display of some grocery product that suggests it to them, or maybe merely the fact that they are in a grocery store. At any rate they buy," Mr. Stephens states, "and it is noticed more than ever since instituting an ice cream department."

ple's interest is maintained. The passing public pays a great deal of attention to these windows, and to sustain their interest, Mr. Ching plans on altering his displays from two to three times each week.

Study the Customer at the Fountain

Little Courtesies and Attentions That Are Appreciated by the Public and That Build Business for Your Soda Fountain and Ice Cream Department—Caring for Your Equipment

STUDYING the customer's wants has been found advantageous by grocers who are building an ice cream trade in connection with their grocery stores. As one merchant stated, "a man comes in and asks for a certain drink. He comes in and asks for the same thing the next day. After a few times he does not have to ask for it. We serve it."

Little Attentions Appreciated

"We endeavor to study our customer, his wants, what he likes at the fountain, and it saves us a great deal of time," he continued. "For instance: You go into a cigar store to buy a cigar. If the clerk sets before you your favorite cigar or package of cigarettes, you are likely to go back there again. That is the idea we try to drive home, over the fountain.

"Another thing: In serving our ice cream and soft drinks we try to do this: As soon as a person sits down, a glass of water and a napkin are placed in front of him. We do this especially when the fountain is very busy. The psychological effect is that it has a tendency to hold the customer, and in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, a man will sit there until his turn comes.

Ice Cream to Take Home

"In the serving of ice cream to take home, we take a paper bag and fill it about a quarter full of water, then squeeze the top, shake up the bag and let it run out. Then we put the ice cream pail into that bag, and the ice cream will keep from three to four hours longer that way than if you just put it in the ice cream container itself. A good many dispensers put the water in the pail where the ice cream goes, with the result that the little globules of water which stuck to the sides have frozen and formed a fine granular ice which is found in the ice cream after it is taken home. This bag idea is the best way to serve ice cream for home consumption.

Watching the Equipment

"Every two or two-and-half months, we have a thorough inspection made of the soda fountain. We take all the ice cream containers out of the cabinet, we get behind the ice pack in the back bar, we inspect it all thoroughly for any leaks or holes that might come from rough handling or putting the ice in the ice chest. In putting the ice cream in, the same sometimes gets over the side, forming rust; we take care of things like that right away; we don't allow them to grow. It starts as a little hole, then you have to get a new container.

"We have never had a replacement of any kind at the fountain, such as new coils, carbonator or draught arms, for the same reason. We don't allow those things to creep in and we save money by watching equipment that way."

No Longer Are Sodas, Nut Sundaes, Only Feminine Luxuries

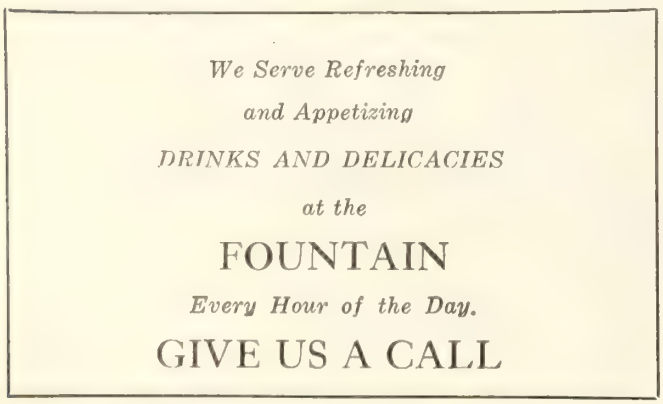
"Never has there been such an extraordinary multiplication of shops and counters where candies, fruits, light lunches, sandwiches, hot and cold sodas, bouillions, milk-and-egg drinks and the like are to be had as within the last six months," comments Dr. Woods Hutchinson, in the Saturday Evening Post apropos of the consumption of soft drinks since the enactment of prohibition.

"No longer are ice cream sodas, nut sundaes, and hot fountain drinks to be regarded as feminine luxuries and dissipations. There are as many men as women customers at these unscreened bars, and the consumption of fruit, sweet drinks, ice creams, candy and other forms of sugar have risen enormously.

"This might give us a thrill of apprehension for the safety of the national stomach. But when we remember that sugar is the substance of which alcohol is only the shadow, that it is a real food and fuel instead of a sharp one, that it gives strength instead of a mere feeling of strength, and that if we are well and active we can burn half, or three-quarters of a pound a day of it, clean and safe without injury to our boiler linings, we can be reassured that we still have a margin of safety between us and dangerous excess.

"Particularly striking has been the blossoming out on every foot of possible soil of a multi-colored crop of every description, in forms convenient for carriage in the vest pocket. Peppermints, fruit juice tablets, gum, in lozenges, squares and rings, catch the eye now on every newsstand, at every subway or railway station, at the entrance or in the hallway of every office building. And all this in spite of the serious shortage of sugar and the highest prices that have ever been known.

"What the ultimate effect on the national health may be remains to be seen, but so far all that is visible is that one health office after another is pointing with pride to the lowest death rates on record, and we know well that as a disturber of the stomach alcohol is a champion while sugar is a mere amateur. The latter, in the language of the ring, could be told to get a reputation before it would have a right to contest for the belt."



Cards such as these will when put in the windows, bring into the store many a thirsty passer-by.

Sells 500 lbs. of One Line of Candy Monthly

J. A. Walters, Sydney, N.S., Specializes in Groceries of the Higher Grades, Directing Particular Attention to the Sale of Candy—How He Introduced a Certain Line That Had Not Previously Been Sold in This Town.

By Special Correspondent Canadian Grocer

Sydney, N. S.—One of the biggest displays of candies to be seen in Sydney, N. S., is in the store of J. A. Walters, Charlotte St. This man sells the higher class lines, goods that are suitable for parties, picnics and special occasions.

Inquiry as to how this man had built up his sales of candy, Mr. Walters told a representative of Canadian Grocer that through display, and advertising in the papers he had greatly increased his turnover. "If a man puts an advertisement in the paper on Friday," he remarked, "telling of the 'Saturday Specials' and then follows this up with a window display showing the same lines as advertised in the paper, he is bound to put it over. But if there is no particular backing to the newspaper advertisements the results will fall flat. The idea of advertising one line in the paper as a special and then showing something else in your window is not advisable."

500 lbs of Candy in a Day

Mr. Walters is somewhat of an artist and uses his talent in making attractive window cards and backgrounds. The latter, if fashioned along original lines, have a wonderful drawing power for the windows and increase the sales considerably as they have a big tendency to attract the passerby. A "special" was made of candy not long ago and for this five hundred pounds of candy were ordered. It was all sold in the one day. It was all displayed in the window and as a background a home scene was made, showing "Daddy" bringing home the week-end treat. It is the contention of this man that a background like this along with a big display will sell goods any time.

Introducing a New Line

An example of what can be done if one only gets behind a thing was cited to Canadian Grocer. An agency was obtained for a high-class line of candy, which up to the time of getting the agency was unknown in this city, and whenever a customer came in and bought articles for parties, etc., they were given a package of this candy free. The size of the package depended on the number of people that were to be present, the boxes ranging from two to five pounds. This same scheme was also tried out with people who were planning picnics, and as a result of these methods, the sales have grown to five hundred pounds per month. There was no special favor asked of the people giving the parties, such as suggesting that they mention the new line, etc., it being decided to wait until they noticed the difference between the new line and others. Of course the newspapers were used to tell of the new goods, and the samples "put it over". People who have tried candies in this manner are now sending in from twenty-five miles, for the line. Before the war it was quantity that came first but now it is quality, not "how many will I get but rather what brand are they."

Plenty of Light in Windows

"There are too many merchants that are far too careful of the electric lights," Mr. Walters continued. "When the crowd is in the streets, the windows and the interior of a store should be well lighted. Where many merchants make the mistake in lighting the windows, is that they have lights on only one switch, and they must be either on full or off completely. This is a very poor system, and not good judgment."

Mr. Walters has each of his windows equipped with five switches so that he can regulate the light when it is most needed. This is the way he handles his window lighting on ordinary nights. From six to seven when it is just beginning to get dark he turns on one light in each window, at seven he turns on a second and at seven-thirty the balance, which remain on, until ten o'clock when two are turned out, at eleven one more while the other two burn until the store is closed. On Saturday night the entire window is kept lighted from the time the people come on the streets until the crowds have mostly gone home. This system is of course regulated by the time darkness sets in and according to the amount of traffic on the streets.

"Hard to Sell a Cheap Candy Where You Cultivate a Trade for a Good One"

Grocer in a Small Village of 800 People Sells 1,500 Pounds of High-grade Chocolates in the Course of a Year

"Where you cultivate a trade for a good candy, it is hard to sell a cheap one," remarked T. C. Ivory, a grocer in Omemee, Ont., to Canadian Grocer recently on the subject of selling candies. Mr. Ivory is a grocer, long established in Omemee, and a merchant who believes in stocking only what he thinks is the best, irrespective of what it is. In his candy sales he specializes in one high-class brand. He carries both the boxes and the bulk varieties. "Last year," he stated, "we sold 1,500 pounds of the chocolates made by this one manufacturer, which I consider very good for a village of this size. Since we have been selling the better grades of chocolates we find it difficult to sell the cheaper kinds."

Chocolates are shown in Mr. Ivory's store in a handsome silent salesman, right up at the front of the store, so situated as to attract the eye of the customer coming into the store. "We think of course that there is nothing better in the way of candy, than the kind that we are carrying," Mr. Ivory added. "We aim to always have it fresh and also a good assortment. The young people of the community are the chief buyers of candy, and knowing that we aim to have a good fresh supply always on hand, they come here for it. But there are times when we sell a good deal of candy to our regular customers, when making their weekly purchases. We have been suggesting it in this way, and in almost every instance a sale can be made."

Mr. Ivory sells ice cream through the summer months, but handles it only in the bricks. Sales during the hot weather last year, he stated, averaged 50 bricks a week. While this is not a heavy turnover at all, as a sideline, it is satisfactory, and very frequently means the sales of other lines, when the purchase of a brick of ice cream is being made.

RESTRICTION ON APIARISTS

Ottawa, May 3.—The importation into Canada from Europe of bees, used or second-hand hives, or raw hive goods or products, excepting honey, is prohibited on and after the first day of May, 1922, according to an order ssued by the Federal Minister of Agriculture last week. The order, a statement issued by the Department of Agriculture says, is necessary owing to the danger of introducing a contagious disease of bees, known as the "Isle of Wight" disease.

Cent Candy Sales Total 60,000 Pennies

Christie & Co., Truro, N. S., Believe in Paying Attention to the Children and Accord Them Every Attention That Would be Given the Parents—"If One Can Get the Confidence of the Children, the Good Will of the Parents is Easy," Declares the Manager

ATTENTION to the children who are sent by their parents to do the shopping should receive the thoughtful consideration of every grocer, according to the statement of the manager of Christie & Co., Truro, N. S. "One half of the business done in this store is with children," he stated to a representative of Canadian Grocer recently. "We owe the growth and extension of our business in a very large measure to the treatment accorded children when they come into the store. It is my opinon that a child shopping for its parents should be treated in the same manner as the parents. The parents too, know that if they send their children to this store, that they will be given just as good a class of goods, as if they had come themselves. Many children bring notes but many do not, and there are a number of the latter who forget what they came after, and it is necessary to call up the parents and find out exactly what was sent for. The parents appreciate service of this kind. It certainly pays to make friends of the children, and it is a bad policy to be abrupt with them as many merchants are. Children remember the courtesy shown them, and parents are quick to resent any slight shown towards a child sent to do the shopping. If one can get the confidence of the children, the good will of the parents is easy."

This store has the record of having received from the children the first year in business, in the form of one cent sales of candy, 60,000 Canadian pennies, indicating as it does something of the popularity of the store with the children.

Sales Ahead of Last Year

"Sales in this store have been ahead of last year," the manager of Christie & Co. continued. "We have only one price, and while prices are not cut, they are such that customers are buying at a reasonable figure, and at the same time leaving a fair profit for the business. When we commenced, we adhered strictly to cash, but now have broken away somewhat from our original idea. However our credit accounts are light, and all are good.

Educate Customers on Delivery

"Educating our customers when to expect delivery of their purchases has been our endeavor ever since we started. There are people who through the laxity of other grocers have developed a habit of calling up at all hours of the day for goods, and expecting each time to have them delivered. Such a condition has been brought about largely by merchants who have moved at the beck and call of customers, and who have made special trips, no matter how large the order may be.

Never Consider Cost

"These grocers never stopped to consider the cost of this service, and instead of getting better satisfied customers, they were educating them to a service that positively could not be continued if the business is going to grow. Goods from this store are sent out when the customer asks for them, but where the customer is an old offender at the "must have them right away" game, they are told that the car is away at the other end of the city, and that there are others in equally as big a rush. They are told that they will get their goods according to the time at which the order is received. An explanation of this kind to the customer has been the means of eliminating a lot of these rush orders. We have an automobile delivery, and we are able to give a quick service. I make a call twice daily myself on the customers getting orders, and at the same time it shows the customer that I am taking a personal interest in them."

Too Many Grocers Pass Up a Profitable Line in Soft Drinks

W. A. CHING, a grocer at Summerside, P.E.I., is of the opinion that a great many grocers overlook the additional business that can be procured through the sales of soft drinks. He handles them in his store, and declares that any merchant will be well repaid for stocking the same. They produce gratifying returns, and are well worth while. Mr. Ching gives a lot of prominence to soft drinks in his store, and in addition to the numerous lines of bottled goods, four varieties of ades are sold. Mr. Ching not only sells these drinks in case lots and less, but he sells them for consumption in the store, and for this purpose he makes his own ades, aiming to have them fresh every day. He thinks that by serving drinks in his store, he gets people inside that otherwise might not come, and once they are in, he says it is not hard to sell them other things. Handling soft drinks is not only profitable in themselves, but they are profitable from the standpoint of other lines that they sell.

Novel Stunts That Help the Ice Cream Department

A stunt that resulted in a new use for soda straws was that arranged by an enterprising merchant recently who has a fountain. He constructed a small lattice work fence against the window glass. Soda straws in crisscross fashion formed the fence. Behind the fence came a single row of bottles of soft drinks. Ice cream cones were placed upside down on top of the bottles. The remainder of the display was devoted to candy. It proved an effective advertisement of the ice cream department.

Display of Ice Cream Cones

A striking effect can be had by filling the entire window with strings of ice cream cones, which hang from the ceiling and reached almost to the floor. Five cones may be strung at equal distances apart on each string. Each cone was filled with fluffy white cotton to represent ice cream.

A merchant last summer employed kewpie dolls to attract attention to the ice cream cones handled. The center kewpie, three feet tall and becomingly attired in a frilly crepe paper dress, carried an empty ice cream container under her arm. Surrounding this doll were two smaller kewpies, with ice cream cones in their hands.

Woodenware

"Is this the woodenware department?"

"Yes."

"I dunno if I am in the right place."

"What is it you wish?"

"My wife told me to get some lipsticks."

Getting Results From Advertising

Points Made in Appealing to the Public Must be Lived up to—Goods Must be All the Merchant Says They Are—Here Are the Views of a Man Who Has Learned From Experience How and Why it Pays to Advertise—You Must Make it Pay

(Written by a Retailer in Western Canada)

A STUPENDUOUS amount of nonsense (this article will probably be included) has been written about most of the important things in our modern world from golf right down to orthodox Christianity, yes, a great deal of nonsense; but without fear of contradiction, we make the statement that more twaddle, bosh and slop has been written around and about the theme of "Advertising" than has been written about anything else in the world.

Must Be Lived Up To

Some of the stuff is actually excruciating but for simon-pure inanity, lamentable vapidity and rock-bottom insipidity, nothing can surpass the horrible axiomatic slogan, "It pays to advertise." Just say that phrase over to yourself a few times and then repeat "Water is wet," and if you can sense any difference in the meaning of the two, you have a keen brain.

It pays to be honest; it may even, at times, pay to be dishonest, but surely there is no person, however illogically inclined, will maintain that the only reason why one should be honest is because it is a paying proposition, or again, that a man should be occasionally dishonest for reward, and so, in the case of advertising, that it pays is no argument. Of course it pays to advertise, but on one condition only; that it pays, is the steel frame-work upon which advertising is assembled; if advertising did not pay no one would advertise, or, to be more exact, if advertising could not be made to pay no person would bother with it.

"Pay," reward is an inseparable concomitant of advertising but only if the advertising is lived up to. No advocate could ever hope to win a case with a verbal deluge of axioms, because every utterance of his would be greeted with cries of, "We know that," meaning, really, "We have always known that." Mere monetary reward is not sufficient reason for advertising, but is simply one of the inevitable results of conscientious publicity.

All establishments, religious—social or commercial—to be worthy, must have moral backbone, and the great function of advertising is two-fold: first, to supply the backbone, if not already there, and, secondly, to keep the moral stiffness of the figurative vertebrae from relaxing.

A merchant may conduct a business without advertising of any kind and get along in a pottering kind of way, and with little effort, because he has no standard of quality or service to live up to; he has not promised to do anything definite; he has not pledged himself to deliver a certain, unchanging quantity and quality of merchandise and attention to his patrons; in short, he has not signed any contract with the public, and so, without aim, without objective without self-imposed obligation, without fear of breaking his given guarantee, without any promise to buy and to sell only the best, without any colors to nail to the mast or even any mast to nail to a flag, he slumps along, depending on haphazard and transient trade, with small chance of ever catering to the same customer twice; ..... waddles on not caring, until the very advertising which he ignored, grows weary of not being picked up and put to work, and starts out of its own accord, publishing abroad, in that merchant's field of operations, the dreadful state into which things have fallen, and soon even the spasmodic customers sidestep the non-advertised store, even the cobwebs gather fast, the mildew spreads its green hand of destruction over all, and soon it is a case of no customers, no cash rceipts, no credit, no stock,..... a case of sans everything.

Living up to Assurances

The fundamental attribute of an advertisement is that it is a voluntary contract, paid for and signed by the person issuing it, and very few people will doubt the integrity of a concern which of its own accord, binds itself to do a certain thing for the public and puts its name on the dotted line. For instance a grocer puts in his local newspaper:

> "To-morrow morning from ten till twelve, we will sell one dozen large Sunny oranges for 25c."

Do the readers of this ad believe the statement—why they never think of doubting it, and at the given time, numerous people who have read the ad will be waiting to buy the oranges. Now, and here the "Pay" part of an ad. comes in. The oranges must be large and they must be "Sunny." The customers want just what the grocer said he would sell, and they get it, for the grocer's reputation, not, mind you, merely his cash-register, but his reputation and character are at stake, and he has to sell what he said he would sell or suffer the penalty of all contract-breakers. Again, a grocer may advertise:

> "A clean store, a tidy store."

Now, instinctively, the readers of that ad., who have cause to enter the store will make an inspection of the premises, and if the general appearance does not measure up to the full standard of "clean" and "untidy," conversant customer's impression of the store will be a poor one, and not just because of apparent dirt or untidiness, but because the proprietor advertised a well-kept store and failed to deliver the goods. Disorder in a dozen other stores might have passed without criticism, but disorder in a place advertised as spick-and-span is bound to cause adverse comment.

Like Launching an Attack

Yes, it pays to advertise if the advertiser ever and always, does what he said he would do. Every letter of the contract with the public must be lived up to. This is the unalterable law, the Median Persian law, of all advertising, this, the backing up to the hilt of an ad., is the mint through which all advertising must pass before it can be converted into negotiable gold. Advertising is the battery with which a concern hammers at the wall of public indifferences, and a well sustained and carefully planned attack must eventually cause surrender, but not unconditional surrender, of the beseiged; but unless every word of the terms of capitulation is kept to the letter the public will scurry back to their fortress, convinced that the attacker was only making a noise, and will treat the blusterer with the contempt which means commercial decease.

Advertising is the inflexible, implacable taskmaster of rectitude in business. Flash-in-the-pan ads. may shoot across the sky for a few awe-inspiring nights, but if the pyrotechnist can't back up his display with the "goods," all his rockets will have been burned in vain.

Non-advertising will bring about a lingering business death but advertising not lived up to will result in a snappy and sudden exit.

"It pays to advertise" may be forgotten, but "You pay to advertise" must be remembered; yes, you pay to advertise and it takes untiring effort to advertise and it takes untiring effort behind the screen to get returns on your investment.

Advertising is a constant urge to do the utmost; a pitiless, self-inflicted goad to success. Advertising is not a magic wand, which miraculously changes goods or service into cash, rather is advertising a many-thonged tawse with which the advertiser flagellates himself to constant and ever-increasing effort to serve his patrons to fullest extent of his ability.

To sum up, advertising is either the voice of unadorned truth, or it is but the sound of brass and tinkling cymbal.

You must make advertising pay.

Does not Advertise Many Articles but Talks in a Convincing Way About a Few

The Malcolmson Idea is to Make an Advertisement so Alluring in Its Interest and Yet so Simply Worded That His Readers Are Looking for it Every Night

ONE DICTIONARY gives the definition of advertising as "a notice in public print: an announcement." But this, in the writer's opinion, would not assist the student of advertising very materially in constructing an advertisement with pulling power, one that would create a desire in the mind of the reader to possess a certain article. An advertisement to sell goods must tell something about the article offered for sale in such an interesting way that the reader is at once impressed with a feeling that some of the goods must be his or hers. In summing up the definition of advertising, Elbert Hubbard has perhaps come closer to the true meaning, when he says that "advertising is the education of the public, as to who you are, where you are, and what you have to offer in the way of skill, talent or commodity." He also says "there are two good reasons for advertising: one to sell goods; the other is to create good-will." Pick up any newspaper and the advertisement which lingers longest in our mind is the one that tells us the most interesting story about some particular article, and if it happens to be some article of food, the mouth fairly waters, and the reader is likely to exclaim, "My, that sounds good. I must order some of it."

The Malcolmson Way

Such is the impression conveyed to the mind after reading an advertisement by Malcolmson's, Limited, Chatham, Ont. These advertisements do not occupy a great deal of space, rarely ever larger than six inches in length and one column in width, but they tell the story so intensely interestingly that the reader at once feels that to become more acquainted with the Malcolmson store would indeed be profitable, and one can almost hear the reader of the daily paper, as she opens it each evening say, "I wonder what Malcolmson is advertising today?"

It is not the Malcolmson idea to publish a long list of articles, but rather to choose one, two, or three articles, and say something about them as simply as possible—and just as if a salesman was talking to you over the counter. Three of these advertisements are reproduced on this page, and the following excerpts are from some of his more recent advertisements.

"Santa Clara Prunes.—The fine blue-black prunes that have a flavor all their own. They are grown in a sunshiny valley, where they absorb such a lot of goodness. A quart of water to a pound of prunes, and cook the prunes in the water in which they are soaked, add a very little sugar. The result will be prunes that are most appetizing."

About Salads

As everyone knows the French are the great Salad makers. With them the salad is a daily occurrence, and many things are made into most appetizing salads. Of course the dressing is an important part of it, and as salad dressings are a little expensive to buy we give here a recipe for a plain French Dressing for salads.

Three tablespoons of good Olive Oil; 1 tablespoon of Vinegar; ¼ teaspoonful of salt; ¼ teaspoonful of black pepper.

First put the oil into a small bowl, then add gradually the salt and pepper until they are all mixed. Then add gradually the vinegar, stirring continually for about a minute. Remember it must be thoroughly mixed. Lettuce Salad requires less vinegar, but for any other vegetable salad the above answers splendidly. Beets, Celery, String Beans, Cabbage or any other vegetable may be used.

The Lure of the Maple Tree

There is something fascinating in the idea of getting an [illegible] syrup from a tree. Then the running of the sap is a sure promise that Spring is near. No doubt it is a combination of these two things that makes Maple Syrup such an interesting thing. Of course, having once tasted it; there's no doubt where our interest lies—it is in the flavor.

The old method, very picturesque, but not clean—of boiling sap in an open kettle over wood fire has been changed. Now it is evaporated in a long series of pipes, so that no smoke, nor dirt has a chance it.

"Always Better to Put Price on Article"

This Firm Introduces High-Class Specialties Providing the Same Are Profitable and Worth the Time of Selling Them—Well Dressed Windows Are the Magnet to Draw People Into the Store

"IT IS always better to put the price on the article whether it is a special quotation or the regular price," stated Mr. Steubing of Steubing & Co., grocers at Kitchener, Ont. "We use our windows to sell goods for us all the time. We used to be around in a side street. Since we have moved to the main street, our windows are more than paying for the difference in the rents of the two places. Location of course counts a great deal in estimating results to be obtained from window displays. Where we are now located, we are in the best block in the city. All the down-town shoppers must pass our store, and the windows are the magnet that gets them into the store. A grocer cannot too highly estimate the value of the windows as an aid and stimulus to selling.

Out of Season Green Stuff

"All winter we have sold out of season fruits and vegetables—lettuce, tomatoes, rhubarb, strawberries, spinach and cauliflower. We bring them in especially for the week-end trade, and some weeks our sales have run over three hundred dollars. Display has been the big factor in seling these lines. We not only use the windows for selling fruits and vegetables but a massed display arranged on the floor just inside the door catches the eye of the customer immediately on entering, and a tempting array of these early varieties is bound to induce sales. While of course our biggest sales are at the week-end we carry them right through the week. A window of these lines gets the "catch" trade, the people who do not deal regularly at our store. They are drawn into the store through the medium of the window, and when in here, it is not difficult to sell them other things."

Window Sells Beans

Discussing the selling power of the window, M. Steubing cited several instances where display had been the means of increasing the sale of certain articles. "Recently we put in a window of a line of canned pork and beans. We put the price in the window. The price is always important, whether it is a reduced one or not, and we always put it on an article shown in the windows. During a week we sold between four and five cases of these beans. The window did it. While we did mention this line to people at the counter, a good many people came in and asked for three cans of the beans on display."

Only Top Quality Goods

Steubing & Co. have a high-class trade. They are the oldest established grocers in Kitchener. They believe in carrying only top quality goods, and have no difficulty in getting the high prices that merchandise of this class commands. "We have a demand here," Mr. Steubing stated, "for food products that perhaps are too high priced for many merchants to consider it profitable to handle. Just lately we got a certain kind of cheese that is high in price but is nevertheless selling well. We introduced it to our trade, by suggesting it, when giving their orders, and now a good many of them are buying it right along.

"We do not mind getting behind an article by way of getting it started, if we think it is worthy of the effort. In fact we follow such a policy all the time, and have had some pretty good success in this regard. Of course the article must be good, and must show a reasonable margin of profit to pay us for our time in "pushing" its sale. In the past few weeks we have been selling a cake flour for the first time. It is a very high grade line and we had no difficulty in getting our customers to give it a trial. It is now a real seller. In fact we have re-ordered four times since placing our first one. People are buying it right along."

Introduces New Biscuit

"Here is another thing that we have introduced with very gratifying results," Mr. Steubing added, as he lifted a package of biscuits. "It is a high grade specialty, but is a good seller with a certain class of trade. Its quality cannot be disputed and some of our customers now will not have anything else in this line. We had not previously stocked it, until about four months ago, but the continued sale of it promises well. We have also been selling a lot of ripe olives this past winter. There is a very good demand for them. We keep them out where people can see them and very frequently in taking the orders, suggest them. However we have regular customers for them who ask for them all the time."

Is Well Equipped

The Steubing store is a well equipped grocery, as the photographic reproduction of one side of it, accompanying this article, will indicate. "Anything that makes for convenience and better service to our customers we like to have," remarked Mr. Steubing. "We have had patented bins for a good many years now, and would not like to be without them. They are not only a great convenience, but are sanitary and clean, keeping bulk stock in first-class condition all the time.

"Extra Quality Halibut.—This last shipment of halibut is surely the nicest we have had in weeks. All the halibut has been nice, but this is extra quality. Whether you boil it, or fry it, you will surely like this."

"Canned Fruits.—The canned fruits we sell are selected fruits, put up in heavy sugar syrup, just like you would do at home. You will find the flavor simply delicious."

"Fancy Biscuits.—The pick of the biscuit factories you will find here. Such a variety to choose from, and each one selected because of some special goodness. There are rich ones, and plain ones, and fruit ones, and jam ones, and many another kind to suit all tastes."

It is an acknowledged fact that the potatoes grown in Ontario the past season were not up to the mark, and in some localities were particularly poor quality. Malcolmson apparently realizing this, put in a stock from another province and this is how he told his customers about them:

"New Brunswick Potatoes. — The only real dry cooking potatoes last fall came from New Brunswick. The weather in most of Ontario was such that good potatoes were not plentiful. But with New Brunswick it was different—and really good potatoes came from there. These potatoes are large in size, rather uniform, and bake splendidly."

"Maple Syrup.—The cold climate, the hardwood maple trees, the rolling country, all combine in the Eastern Townships of Quebec to produce the finest maple syrup in the world. And then the care taken! The maple sap is evaporated in a series of pipes, so that neither smoke, nor ashes, nor dirt come near it. We have bought from the same firm for the past fifteen years. It has always been so good that our customers wait for it."

A Window Display That Resulted in an Increased Turnover of Seeds in the Spring Months

The above illustrates the way Fenton and Smith, of Pembroke, Ontario, dressed a window for the display of seeds. A frame was built five feet by seven, which was covered with green crepe paper to match the walls. On the frame there are sheaves of wheat placed, and the walls are covered with artificial flowers to fill in space which is covered with package seeds. In the bottom a tray is built in the shape of a star, which is filled with different colored seeds and in each space is a letter of the firm's name. When spelled out, it reads Fenton and Smith. The window was trimmed by one of the staff, W. R. Tario.

"Cash and Carry Pays and Pays Well"

Grocer Makes More Money in the First Year He Has Cash and Carry Department Than He Ever Made in Any Previous Twelve-month—Still Has the Regular Service Department Where Credit and Delivery Are Extended

B. G. Crabtree has operated a grocery store in the City of Ottawa for a number of years, giving the service of credit and delivery. Not so very long ago he decided, following the suggestion of a customer who always paid cash and carried all her purchases, to inaugurate a cash and carry department in his store. It has been in operation long enough to convince him that it is fully appreciated by a large proportion of his clientele. He commenced it by way of experiment, and at the outset only reserved a small corner of his store for the same. It was only a short time, he states, when he saw the wisdom of spreading the system throughout the entire store. Each clerk was made familiar with the two prices, the regular price including the service of credit and delivery, and then the cash and carry price. In an interview with the Ottawa correspondent of Canadian Grocer, and contained in this article, Mr. Crabtree states that some of the worst cranks on the question of delivery have been converted to the cash and carry plan of doing business, and from his standpoint he says that he has been able to cut down on the expense of delivery and accounts, saving approximately six per cent. on these two items, a few months after adopting the new way.

"EVERY grocery store should have a cash and carry department. It pays and pays well," remarked B. G. Crabtree, Elgin street, Ottawa, while discussing the merits of this system with the Ottawa representative of Canadian Grocer.

"Cash and carry meets with the general approval of my customers," explained Mr. Crabtree. "When I started the system going in my store not so very long ago I was rewarded by a hearty vote of thanks from many of my best customers who were only too glad of an opportunity to save a little money by carrying their own parcels. I set the ball rolling in a modest way, by reserving a small corner of the store for cash and carry by way of experiment. The newspapers and my windows were used extensively to bring the matter to the attention of the buying public. The scheme took well immediately, and it was not long before I saw the wisdom of spreading the system throughout the entire store. That is, I had each of the clerks familiarize themselves with the two prices, regular and cash and carry, and the cut rate articles were sold in every part of the store. To add stimulus to the scheme and encourage as many as possible to fall in line with it, I commenced to put on special sales at regular intervals for cash and carry customers exclusively. That is, certain articles were offered at a price even lower than the cash and carry price. These articles were well displayed in the windows with attractive price tickets attached."

What About the Results?

"And what about the results?" enquired Canadian Grocer.

"Fine, putting the system into operation I had two delivery trucks and a rig, and was employing three drivers. It was not long before I was able to dispense with the services of one of the drivers and get rid of one of the trucks. I figured that I was saving approximately 6 per cent. on delivery and accounts and decided to give my cash and carry customers the benefit of this. One customer kept tab for a month and found that by carrying all her purchases and taking advantage of the special sales, she had saved 12 per cent. In a very short time we had practically changed our business from a charge to a cash trade. The tables were almost completely reversed.

Profits Are Right Too

"At the beginning we had four direct telephone lines. In a short time we were able to dispense with one of these at a saving of fifty dollars a year. We gave the customers the benefit of this saving also and this helped to increase trade more."

"You seem to have been mighty generous with your customers, what about profits?" enquired the interviewer.

Mr. Crabtree smiled. "Why, the first year, we made more money than we had ever made in any previous year," he replied. "The saving in many ways was remarkable and we were enabled to purchase a number of time and labor saving devices which also helped greatly. Also, it was a wonderful inducement to those people who were the worst cranks about delivery. We had one customer who, for months was in the habit of telephoning for a cake of yeast just about closing time every second night. If the delivery men were busy, we found it necessary to call a boy in off the street and give him some candy as a reward for making the delivery. Thus it very often cost us five cents to deliver a three cent article. Very shortly after we put the cash and carry system into operation this customer came in to make some inquiries about it, and we thereupon seized upon the opportunity to do a little explaining that opened her eyes. She had not realized what a nuisance she had been. Fortunately she was one of the many customers who became enthusiastic over the cash and carry proposition and now she comes to the stores regularly every day, buys her groceries, pays for them and carries them home.

Regulates Delivery

"With a number of such cases adjusted we were eventually able to maintain a regular delivery system. It is very seldom now that we are called upon to deliver an article after four in the afternoon, whereas in the old days we were delivering at all hours, very often after six o'clock."

"Do you confine cash and carry to certain articles?" was the next question.

"Oh no, it applies to everything we sell. Every article has two prices."

"What class of people mainly take advantage of this system?" queried Canadian Grocer.

"All classes, rich and poor alike," was the answer. "We have many fairly well-to-do customers who have charge accounts, but who also at times take advantage of cash and carry. Many of these have cars and use them to very good advantage in this connection."

"What has been your actual saving in delivery?" the interviewer asked.

$2,000 Saved in Delivery

Mr. Crabtree replied that last year it cost him $2,000 less for delivery than the year before. "And our business has been getting in much better shape on that account," he added. "We are doing a much larger volume of trade. Of course it means a lot more work, but it is very interesting and what is even more important it pays well. I, have been trying to preach cash and carry to a lot of the fellows in this city for some time, but they don't seem to see the wisdom of it yet."

"It would be interesting to know what gave you the notion to start the ball rolling?" suggested Canadian Grocer.

"Well I don't mind telling you," quickly replied Mr. Crabtree. "I had one good customer who for years always made it a habit of coming to the store for everything that was required and paying cash for it. It was very seldom that we were called upon to make delivery to the home of that customer. One day when we were conversing about matters in general she called attention to the fact that she gave us very little trouble in the way of making delivery and keeping accounts for her, and gently suggested that she should be given some consideration. She went as far as to offer the suggestion that we might make it an inducement for others to follow her example, by offering a certain amount off for cash and carrying. I turned the matter over very carefully in my mind for several days, and finally decided to make the venture. I have never had any reason to regret that decision."

NEW YORK EATS 11 MILLION GALLONS OF ICE CREAM IN YEAR

New York.—Six million gallons of ice cream.

That is the amount of the cool, favorite summer dish New Yorkers ate during last summer.

It is the figure given by James Cooney, Chief of Division of Food Statistics and Market Conditions, Board of Health.

"New York uses 11,000,000 gallons of ice cream a year," says Cooney. "Over half of this—almost three-fifths of it—is eaten in the summer and early autumn months. It averages about one gallon per person during those months."

DEVISES NOVEL PLAN TO INCREASE CANDY SALES

A merchant anxious to increase his sales of candy devised a new calling card consisting of a small box, card size, containing two or three pieces of his best candy. His name and business would be printed on the cover in the usual calling card style, with perhaps the invitation, "Open Me," added.

Getting his prospect to eat a bit of this candy would be a good opener for his selling talk. At any rate, the novelty of the card would break the ice and make the prospect more genial.

BELGIUM HOLDS SURPLUS PRESERVED FOOD SUPPLIES

Belgian imports of food products were reduced considerably during 1921. Canada's exports to that country dropped accordingly. An explanation of the cessation of buying of Canadian and American products, especially canned goods, is apparently the fact that the Belgian Government bought very large stocks of preserved foods during the war and after the armistice. These stocks were purchased at very advantageous prices, and at almost par of exchange. Steps were taken recently to liquidate these stocks, and wholesalers have purchased heavy lots at reasonable prices. It is supposed that these stocks are now in the hands of jobbers and are interfering with the regular importations.

For the twelve months ending January, 1922, exports of Canadian products to Belgium amounted to only $12,642,495. This compares with $35,306,624 for the year ending June, 1921.

"Motor Car the Big Factor in Success of the Self Service Store"

This Department Has Not Lost Favor in the Last Twelve Months, Declares Manager of Grocery Department in Vancouver Store—Volume Has Been Maintained and Even Slightly Increased.

By Staff Correspondent Canadian Grocer.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—"Self service has not lost any favor in the last twelve months," stated W. Ellis, manager of the grocery department in the David Spencer Departmental Store, Vancouver.

"I find," said this executive, "that the volume has been maintained, even slightly increased, in the last few months. Of course the motor car is a great factor in the success of a self-service, cash grocery store. I can conceive of places, where the cars were few, where there might not be sufficient trade to maintain a non delivery store, but in the cities, and where a large percentage of the customers drive, the non delivery store that shows a saving will continue to be patronized. Moreover, the number of cars is on the increase each month, and it is very easy for anyone to run in, gather the articles required, pay for them and load them into the car.

Delivery a Big Item of Expense

"Anyone who has given any thought to delivery expense can well understand that the elimination of this item will permit of closer prices, and the savings that can be shown to the grocer purchaser will make it well worth while to drive down and pay cash. I don't want you to think, though, that the large proportion of the trade is strictly motor trade. A big trade is done with those who drive autos, but the major part of the business is done with those who come down once or twice a week, buy what they require, and take their purchases home on the street car, or carry them.

"The self-service grocery is also a splendid shopping place for the children. Often I have found, on the floor, that the children know as well as I do myself exactly where to find any article. Needless to say, each article has a definite position and is never moved from that position. Consequently, all of our customers become familiar with the location of every article."

Placing the Favored Lines

One little wrinkle that transpired in the course of our conversation had to do with the preference given some lines. In the Spencer Self-Serve section the display stands, on which all merchandise is shown, are broad at the base and taper towards the top. The top shelves are slightly above the level of the eye. The bottom shelves are a few inches above the floor. The goods which are favored in the store are placed immediately opposite the average person's shoulder. To get the lines which are not so favored, the customer must stoop. It is remarkable, according to Mr. Ellis, the difference it makes. All of us are more or less unconsciously lazy. Everything else being fairly equal we will reach out for what is taken with least effort.

DOES NOT ADVERTISE MANY ARTICLES

"Orange Marmalade for breakfast—one of the nicest things, made with oranges and sugar only. You will find it very tasty."

Sometimes Malcolmson's advertisements tell about the store service. A recent one started out like this. "There's a freshness and crispness about the way we sell and handle groceries. It's the constant turnover that keeps our goods so fresh and nice." And the advertisement goes on to tell about how the perishable goods are kept and the firm's long experience and judgment in buying, winding up the talk with "whether it is fish or vegetables, or meat, or butter, or coffee, or any other perishable food, the same great care is given them. Things to eat must be good, and cannot be too carefully handled. You are safe when you shop here."

Random Talk On Subject Of Window Trims

To get the very best results from his window displays is the ambition of every grocer when he is dressing and arranging the same. The writer of this article on this page brings out some very good points, the observance of which will lead to better window displays, and in all probability, to better results from the standpoint of sales. Are your windows too artistic with no attention paid to the question of price tickets? Are the windows too high? These as well as other points are briefly but interestingly dealt with in this article.

PROBABLY the most important step a window trimmer, whether amateur or professional, can take towards success is to bear in mind that he is not dressing his window with the intention of showing how clever he is, how artistic or how original, but is working to sell goods, to make the window part of the sales force. In fact the professional window trimmer falls down more often on this point than the amateur, since the former knows his power. He is fond of the originality of his ideas and he is trained in the principles of window trimming often to the loss of the sales idea. He forgets that he is not a decorator, but one branch of the sales force, an important branch too.

He succeeds in attracting attention and comment but very often that is where it ends. A woman will go home and say, "Smith's windows are lovely this week," but later on she will say, "Oh there are some fine bargains on at Blank's tomorrow. I saw them in the window." Very often the effectiveness of the display is in the presence of price tickets, but even should they be there and the goods are not arranged in an attractive way, the attention of the public will not be gained.

Benefit By Another's Mistakes

But at the same time let the amateur trimmer beware of scorning the professional's artistic bent. Colors and color schemes play an important part in catching the eye. There is no sin in stealing another's ideas in window trimming. A study of a competitor's window will often betray faults which will help in making your own window more effective. At the same time a good plan after a trip downtown or through the retail part of the town or city, is to sit down for a minute and try to recall one or two of the windows you passed. Then ask yourself why that window appealed to you or attracted your attention. The striking part of the display will stick in your mind. To the grocer of course, the grocery windows will appeal most and to the dry goods merhcant, the dry goods windows, on account of the common interest.

Little Freaks Of Color

A striking example of the effectiveness of color is demonstrated in the window of a Montreal grocer, who a short time ago was displaying marmalades and jellies. Color is the secret of attraction in this case. The window is well ballanced with two pyramids of bottles built in a "V" shape from the front to the back. At the rear of the window is an ordinary soap box draped with red crepe paper and built up around the front and over the top with bottles of marmalade and jellies. At night, the evenings are long now, two lights are lit in the box and red and orange glow, lent by the light filtering through the pyramid of bottles, commands attention. In this case the effect would be nothing more than pretty if the big card as a base of the window did not feature the price, which in itself is attractive.

Uses Wall Paper

In the case of another grocery store, wall paper of different designs serves as a base for window displays which is comparatively inexpensive and at the same time attractive. The merchant changes his window once a week and from ten to twenty cents' worth of wall paper will cover the window, which is a large one. He points out that the style of paper used depends upon the goods to be displayed since he plans to have a contrast. For instance, he features a window of catchup (red) on a white wall paper and when he has a display of white labelled cans he uses a dark paper. The design in the paper serves to make the goods displayed, stand out. Eggs, bacon, butter or cheese stand out well on a base covered with sawdust, excelsior or straw. At Easter a display on straw is particularly attractive.

Can Windows Be Too High?

Another grocer, who pays particular attention to his windows, claims that many windows are too high and that the display is lost in the big expanse of store that can be seen behind it. He has avoided this by a big lamp shade made of a wooden frame and draped with red crepe paper and a fringe made by cutting the paper into very narrow strips. This big shade covers half the window and contains three lamp globes. To one looking at the window the red glow attracts, with its warm appearance but the bright light confined to the goods in the window emphasizes just what the grocer intends to advertise. In this case, too, the price is featured by neat cards on everything in the window.

Link Up Advertising And Windows

Never forget the important relation which exists between printed advertising and window-advertising. If you bear this relation in mind and act accordingly, you can create a chain of circumstances that in a goodly proportion of instances will lead men and women in your vicinity straight to your store. In the case of the newspaper advertising, the suggestion born of the advertisement in the evening will often be forgotten by the next day, but if in passing the store the idea is again brought to mind by the display of the goods themselves the sale is made immediately and the money spent on the advertising is not wasted.

Colors Attract But the Price Is Essential

Photographs His Window Displays and Keeps a File

A merchant in the West is noted in his city for his unusually effective window displays. Here is how he has made such a reputation possible. He purchased a camera and now he photographs each display that is used, catalogs and files the resulting pictures according to seasons.

When he prepares his Easter exhibit, for instance, he turns to his files and finds an accurate pictorial record of the windows as they looked at the Easter season in previous years. In his effort to improve upon former displays the decorator is stimulated to produce new and still more attractive effects.

"Better Goods Bought On Credit Plan"

Teasdale Bros., Dartmouth, N.S., Prefer a Credit Business to the Cash Trade at Any Time—Between Sixty and Seventy Per Cent. of Their Annual Turnover Represents Credit, and They Declare Losses Are Less Than One Per Cent.

By Staff Correspondent Canadian Grocer

DARTMOUTH, N.S., Dec.—"I prefer credit business to the cash business at any time" says Mr. Teasdale of Teasdale Bros., Dartmouth, N.S. "People will buy better goods and will give a merchant more of their trade than can be done in a cash store. Beside the merchants are able to give better service.

Over 60 Per Cent. Credit

"My credit is at the present time between sixty and seventy per cent. of the turnover, and yet the losses through the giving of credit are less than one per cent of the turnover. There are some cases where the accounts have run for several weeks, but they cannot be considered as losses as they are old customers who have run into a little hard luck, and will quickly adjust the balance when labor conditions are better. There are very few people who require accounts sent to them, as they keep their slips which are given with each purchase and when paying their bill bring these with them. This is one of the features of the account register as it saves time and prevents mistakes that sometimes occur through other methods."

Solicit Orders

The one method which is getting business today in this store is going after it. Four times each week soliciting is done for orders, and the sales that are made through this method are very gratifying. There are many people who are buying from the Teasdale store, only because of this service which is extended to them. Another thing that is pleasing to the people is being able to get goods when they require them. Some grocers refuse to deliver only at certain hours but not so in the Teasdale store, for if a customer calls up and wants something immediately, they get it if it is at all possible, although care is taken not to let this become too much of a habit. Mr. Teasdale believes that this system is not costing him any more money than the delivering only at certain hours, and that his system is holding the customers more than the other. "If you want to get and hold customers to-day you must be willing to cater to their wants and giving delivery of goods when they are wanted is one of the best ways of dispensing service, Mr. Teasdale maintains.

Selling on Telephone

There are some customers who are called by telephone every morning for their daily order, and this service is very much appreciated. When talking to these customers on the 'phone it is always necessary to suggest things as people cannot always remember all the things they want, and many times things suggested are bought that the customer had never considered buying. A few months ago there was a line in the store that was not selling very fast and try as they might it didn't seem to go, until Mr. Teasdale suggested that in all telephone conversations these goods be mentioned, and a description of the kind and quality be given, also that they could be returned if not satisfactory. This was tried out and in a very few days the entire supply was sold. There was not a complaint.

A very extensive line of fruit is displayed in this store and as a result of this the sales are very large. One window is given over to fruit exclusively and the people have come to look upon this particular window as the place to find the fruit. The windows are without doubt the best place to advertise goods in the opinion of Mr. Teasdale. "If merchants would keep their windows neat at all times. The policy of following the markets has always been adhered to in the Teasdale store, Teasdale Bros. maintaining that such a policy is always the wisest one.

The particular store here referred to is one of three stores under the Teasdale name and in two years the sales have increased over fifty per cent.

Keeping in Constant Contact With Your Customers—A Little Preachment on the Grocer's Place in His Store

MONTREAL.—In the case of the larger grocery stores where the proprietor's attention is required for many details, there is often the question as to what place in the store the proprietor should occupy. His duties, it would seem, demand that he take a position in a little office at the back of the store, in a balcony overlooking the counters or up above the store, but the proprietors of some of the largest stores refuse to sever their intimate contact with their customers. It is therefore safe to say that the grocer's station in his store has an important bearing on the success of the business.

Must Oversee Buying

Experiments have been tried by grocers in dividing the buying among the clerks, and while this has a measure of success, it has its disadvantages, particularly where the buying is on a large scale. Many grocers have found it imperative to do their own buying, not because the clerks are incompetent to do it, but because it often entails a risk, a hazard that a clerk would hesitate to shoulder. Good buying cannot be done by rule of thumb. The proprietor takes the same risk but does it knowing that in the case of a mistake he has only to answer to himself and that it is his own money involved. Such a risk in most cases carries with it the opportunity of a wider margin of profit, but nevertheless bears equal chances in the other direction. It is therefore hard for any employee to do full justice to the position of the buyer and the proprietor is called to shoulder it.

Contact With Customers

On the other hand the proprietor stands to lose quite as much, if he isolates himself from his customers in a little secluded office. There is, no doubt, more element of personality in the retail grocery business, than in other lines. A customer establishes a connection with a grocer and either calls at the store or telephones, at least three times a week. That customer naturally expects more personal service, attention and interest from the grocer than from the dry goods merchant. Much depends upon the personality behind the business and all too often it is entirely lacking, unless it is lent by the proprietor himself. His presence in his store is almost imperative.

In view of this, it is interesting to see what the proprietors of some of the larger grocery stores think of the proper place for the grocer in his store. Chas. P. Macklair proprietor of two grocery stores in Montreal, one at 419 Union Avenue and one on St. James Street, is always to be found on the floor of one store or the other. He claims that his buying can be most intelligently done when he has personal contact with his customers, can sense their wants and study the tendencies for the future.

Sells 450 lbs. of Shortening in a Day

Suggesting Quantity Buying to Customers Results in This Merchant Filling Larger Orders Than Ever Before—Buys in Quantities and Aims to Sell in the Same Way—Believes in Quick Turnovers

"WE ALWAYS aim to make customers feel that they are always right," remarked Peter Clark, Sarnia, Ont., to a representative of Canadian Grocer. "We guarantee everything we sell and if for any reason customers do not like the goods, they are quite welcome to return them, get their money back, and no questions asked."

In making the statement, Mr. Clark undoubtedly expressed the fundamental reason why the Clark business has been in existence for over half a century. It was in the year 1856 that the business was founded by the present owner's father, the late Daniel Clark. At that time Sarnia was little more than a village, and with the exception of a two-year period, the business has occupied the present location at the corner of Christina and George streets. In 1864 the store was destroyed by fire, and the business was removed to another location, but two years later at the completion of the present two-story brick building, the business was moved back to the old location. In the year 1889, at the death of his father, Peter Clark took over the management of the business and has conducted it continuously ever since.

Believes in Quick Turnovers

Like many another old established business, Mr. Clark is a strong believer in buying in large quantities, providing there is an incentive for so doing, such as extra discounts etc. Mr. Clark also firmly believes that a fast turnover is quite necessary in these times of keen competition, and for that reason prices are sometimes pared, but never below the safety line.

Having bought in large quantities, Mr. Clark in order to have a fast turnover has adopted a selling idea for suggesting to customers that they also buy in larger quantities. Instead of quoting certain articles at so much a pound, his plan is to quote so many pounds for the dollar, and in this way clean up a large quantity in a short time.

For instance, not long ago he offered shortening at so many pounds for the dollar, and one Saturday alone he passed over the counter 450 pounds. Spreading over a period of five months, he sold twenty-five tierces of shortening (a tierce weighing from 380 to 400 pounds).

27 Gross of Jelly Powder in a Day

During the months of January and February of this year, twenty seven gross of jelly powders were sold, while on a Saturday a few weeks ago he assisted into consumption, twenty-five boxes of prunes.

Although toilet paper is an article all retail grocers handle, the sale of this article is left more or less in the hands of the customers, that is, it is only on rare occasions a display is made of it or suggested to the customer in any shape or form. Generally it is to be found occupying an obscure corner in the store or hid away in some out of the way place. A month ago Mr. Clark decided he would make his customers and others know that he was able to supply this necessary article, and at the same time get his customers in the habit of buying a number of rolls at one time instead of the usual custom of ordering one or two rolls. He filled one window with toilet paper, mentioned it in his advertisement, and by offering so many rolls for one dollar managed to clean out eighteen cases in one day. Another stunt similar to those mentioned above was to dispose of thirty dozens of a certain brand of custard powder in about two weeks.

Window Display and Advt.

Window displays and daily newspaper advertising play an important part in the Peter Clark business. The windows are changed frequently, always once a week and sometimes oftener. The goods on display in the windows are also linked up with the advertisements and usually a small counter display is also arranged of the same articles. In this way the articles that are featured at that particular time are suggested to the customer three-fold, which no doubt has something to do with the large turnover in a short period.

"If You Are Sure It Is Good Recommend It

But If You Are Not Sure It Is Better To Keep Quiet"

A GROCER, operating a very small store in one of the northern Canadian summer resorts, was heard to make to one of his customers a confidential report on how he successfully introduced a new line of jams to his summer trade and incidentally he put forward a good selling argument for that particular brand, making one more sale in that line.

This grocer, who purely by dint of his interesting and drole personality, has won from a much more attractive store a goodly part of the trade in that island district, confided to a lady customer as follows:

"I have a brand of jam here that was delivered to me against my best judgment, since it is slightly higher in price than a number of other better known brands. I thought, however, that I would give it a fair trial, so I asked Mrs. ——— to take a jar home and let me know whether or not she thought it was worth the extra few cents a pound. She is quite a stickler on those lines, you know, and pretty keen when it comes to price too. Not that she has to be, 'cause Lord knows they got lots of it," he added with a grin.

"Anyway, she took a four pound jar home on the understanding that she would only pay me the price of the cheaper grade if she didn't think that this was worth more. Well," he said, shifting his weight from one elbow, on which he was leaning, to the other, "that very night Bob, that's her man, came over and paid me the full price, saying that it was worth every cent. More than that, she has been talking that jam to all the women about the lake ever since, and besides me feeling justified to recommend it strong to my customers, most people are asking for it now. It's the only jam I sell and I sell a lot too. The idea is this—if you are sure its good, you can't recommend it too strongly. If you aren't sure, the best thing you can do is to keep your mouth shut. But it is good to get your customers started on it themselves. Then they think they are real tasters and take an interest in the line and that helps a lot. You know you can't beat women for talking; bad or good," he finished with a broad grin.

His jovial chuckle brought his unstudied sales talk to an end and the customer smiled, not at the joke, but at his irresistible, rustic good-nature, as she said, "Let me try a four pound jar."

The sale was made. If the grocer is sure of the quality of the goods he is selling he is not afraid to push it and he can afford to use the advertising trick of asking the customer, as a favor, to sample the goods on her own table, knowing that by doing so, he is making a booster for the line and perhaps tickling the vanity of that particular customer.

Quality and Service Hold Tourists' and Campers' Trade

Fills Many Orders for People Going to Summer Homes and Camping Grounds—Have Never Lost a Cent on Business of This Kind

THE SUMMER months bring an influx of Americans to Canadian summer resorts, a fact that is of paramount importance to the grocer who is continually on the look-out for means of increasing his business. Ottawa and Ottawa district are visited every summer by a large number of Americans who come north to enjoy Canadian rivers and lakes. These visitors must be fed but the question is "how can a grocer go about getting the business for himself?" The needs and tastes of these people are often foreign to the small country grocery store and therefore the city merchant is called upon to meet the demand.

American Trade In Ottawa

W. Bate, proprietor of Bate and Co., grocery store, 111 Sparks St., Ottawa, told a Canadian Grocer representative that just as soon as the winter was over he looked for the orders to come from residents of the U. S. who move north in May. When asked how he went about securing these orders he replied, "The only thing that I do is to give them the best service possible the year before, remembering that these people appreciate quality." Mr. Bate went on to say that the initial order for the season always comes in a week or so before the people arrive and that it has to be carefully packed and shipped to the cottages so that it will be on hand for the first meal. In a case like this service and accuracy are absolutely essential.

Care in Packing

"A grocer has to take particular care in packing these orders, for good service in such trade means much more than it does in every-day city business," remarked Mr. Bate. "The grocer must often use his own judgment in filling the order. I have seen orders where items were omitted that I knew were needed and these, with a note mentioning the fact, show the customers that particular interest had been taken in their order. These are the little things that build up the summer trade for a grocer. These people tell others in distant parts, about the service and so the trade grows.

A Varied Demand

"The grocer is called upon to meet a varied demand in filling these orders. These holiday makers write in every week or so for an order to be shipped. These orders often include nails, paint, fishing tackle, tools or anything from nails to overalls. It means that the grocer must go out and buy these things and pack them with the groceries. It is often inconvenient but it gives the service which builds up a trade that really pays. To avoid trouble, itemized invoices should be mailed, showing, in the case of a number of parcels, in which box or container the different articles are packed, so as to make it easy to get at the things that are needed first.

A Good Paying Trade

"I have never lost one cent through credit given on these accounts. Some of these people have come to me absolute strangers, and have opened big accounts but everyone has been paid at the end of the season. I have found that it pays to cater to this class of trade and my firm belief is that quality and service constitute the best basis on which to build it up. There is one other factor that plays an important part; the general appearance of the store itself, particularly the exterior. When a newcomer to the city goes looking for a place to buy the food for his family, it is the clean, bright, business-looking grocery store that gets the account."

Sends Out Catalogues

Mr. Bate also sends out catalogues to his customers. When a family leaves for the country they are given one of these catalogues which helps them in placing a large order by suggesting things that will be needed for the weeks ahead. This catalogue quotes no price but contains a list of all the goods carried by the store and does much to build sales, particularly with the campers.

The only advertising that Mr. Bate does is a small ad. in the evening newspapers which speaks of the special attention given to campers' orders and the service in shipping that is afforded by the store. Mr. Bate also mentioned the fact that he had a list of the home addresses of these holidaying customers, and that he was considering sending a circular letter to each this year recalling the service that his store had rendered to them in the past.

KEEPING IN CONSTANT CONTACT WITH YOUR CUSTOMERS

Over Forty Years In Grocery Store

Henry Russel, a grocer at 847 St. Catherine St. W. Montreal, has spent forty-two years on the floor of his grocery store and even now refuses to take a place in the office. He still serves behind the counter. He attributes most of his success to the fact that he has kept in personal touch with his customers and regulated his buying by an intimate knowledge of the requirements of his customers. Mr. Russel counts as one of his chief assets his ability to call most of his customers by name which he is only able to do by being constantly on the floor of his store.

"We Shall go Forward Not Backward"

Answer to the Oft Repeated Query "When Do We Get Back to Normal?" is Found in the Assertion That Normal Conditions Again Are Conditions of a New Normality—Is City Competition an Advantage or Disadvantage?

By HENRY JOHNSON, Jr.

IT IS hard, apparently, for business men, old or young, to have patience through these times. They query: "When do we get back to normal?" The answer is that time does not work backward. We shall never get back anyhere. We shall go forward to a combination of circumstances and conditions never hitherto experienced. And when we get there and are running along at what then may seem an even pace, we shall have "normal" conditions again—but they will be conditions of a new normality—or "normalcy" if you will—not conditions of any normality that we have known.

I write this because men seek to return to familiar things—and there can be no such return. Things change. Everything that lives changes. Living speech changes—only dead languages are fixed. So long, then, as your business lives—which it must do to yield you a living—it will change constantly.

Now read these letters and you will see why I have written this preface:

Canadian Grocer,

Gentlemen:—I am very much interested in your magazine and have derived great benefit from the articles therein by Mr. Johnson. We are well located here. Doing a cash business. Sales run between $600 and $700 per week. We have been figuring on an average of 20% profit (margin?). Have done no advertising of any kind since we began here. Our business seems to be dropping off a little. The department stores here are doing extensive advertising in the local papers and sell as cheap as we can buy. I would like you to write me how to figure a margin of profit, how to deal with competition of department stores, whether newspaper ads once in a while would pay and if so the best kinds to use. We are very well satisfied with our business but feel with your advice we can better ourselves during this period of depression. Hoping to hear from you P. D. Q., yours very truly.

Canadian Grocer,

Dear Sirs:—The many articles which appear in your welcome journal by Henry Johnson, Jr., I have found to be very interesting and instructive. In them we find that merchants in many localities have their vexing problems the same as we have here. Let me state mine.

City Competition Advantage Or Disadvantage?

Our village is located in rich farming community; about 600 people; no factories, mines or other employing industries. Twelve miles distant an aggressive city, 50,000 population, with good oiled roads between which make good traveling all the year. In said city many chain and self-serve cash stores. Not all can truly claim supreme quality but they do lay stress on price. These have hypnotized many of our people to serve as missionaries without pay—especially certain women. Members of missionary clubs, parent-teachers and other "uplifters" are unselfish in their spread of the "wiggly-wiggly-ogglyoggly" gospel, but never fail to ask local merchants to contribute to their organizations. No business organization here, though I have tried to form one. Each likes to go it alone. Most storekeepers have had little or no training in merchandising, so intelligent competition is out of the question. Our people expect to get chain store prices with credit and other service features—also out of the question. Is it your opinion that the retailing of foods is undergoing a permanent change—that the chain store is to be permanent? Will normal times cause chains to cease to be a factor? If the change is to be permanent, the small town merchant will seemingly have to adopt new methods or quit. What do you think? Do you think it would be safe for me to change to strictly cash basis, no credit to anybody and make appeal on price basis? That seems to be cause of chain store success—personality is not doing it for them, evidently. I am not pressed for money, have stock paid for, but trade is getting away from our town, and it will have to come back before much more than a living is possible for any of our merchants. May we hope for an early expression of your views?

Subscriber.

To cover the first letter first:

In your town of 30,000 newspaper ads will pay if your location is fairly central. Otherwise, the waste circulation entailed by inconvenience of getting to your store will make this extravagant and circulars will be more effective. In that size town, if newspapers are used, the most effective are little "locals" or "readers."

Bear in mind that advertising is a profession in itself. It is not done successfully by instinct. You should get big city dailies regularly and study the food ads to learn how to be snappy, yet sufficiently descriptive, and how to concentrate much in little space. The foundation of all advertising, whether newspaper or circular is knowledge of the goods. You must know what is inside the can and package. Then tell about the goods as you would if meeting and speaking to the customer. Avoid sensation, flippancy, "humor." Be honest, straightforward, serious minded and sincere—and study everlastingly. Then you may get there—but it's no joke.

The Ghost of Banquo Again

Margin computation? Well, I don't have to write again; for now you can secure booklets, free for the asking and they will give any merchant the needful rudimentary rules for margin computation. Get them by all means! They are worth big money to any merchant. But when you get them, remember what Lord Bacon said, thus:

"The reason why people who borrow books do not return them is that it is much easier to keep a book than to get what is inside of it." So remember that the booklets will do you no good whatever unless you read them—study them—really get what is inside of them to the last word and sentence. You'll find a lot of sales-hints in them, too; hints you can apply to any business.

To meet any competition, department store or other, start a back fire. Do not "meet it" at all. To "meet competition" is to be on the defensive. Start things yourself—be aggressive. What? I cannot tell you specifically without being on the spot. But if you look diligently within your business and try to cultivate observation of things right around you, I think you can find out what to do. It is worth while, too, for once you hit on the first thing, new vistas will open to you that extend indefinitely into the future.

Read good books, not necessarily all business. Read history and biography. That is not only a broadening process, but hints are scattered all through literature which an alert mind will catch. Use every odd minute this way—every one, I said. But write me any time with specific figures on questions from your business. Then I can take hold of something tangible and I shall gladly help whenever possible. Your best indication is that you are thinking, peering into things, trying to find out. Keep it up. You will find the way.

Roads Run Two Ways Always

To my second correspondent, I might point out that "good oiled roads" lead not only to the town of 50,000. They lead likewise from that town to his village. That condition, that characteristic of

Getting Business on "Blue" Mondays

Five Per Cent. Discount on Cash Purchases for Mondays Increases Sales on a Day That is Usually Quiet—Two Per Cent is Allowed for Cash Sales on Other Days

By Staff Correspondent Canadian Grocer

OTTAWA.—Robert McGregor, proprietor and founder of McGregor's Limited, Grocers, 225 Bank Street, Ottawa, has in his forty years in the grocery business developed a number of interesting schemes for increasing business and getting a quick turnover of his stock. Mr. McGregor opened his first grocery store on June 27th, 1882, in what was then called New Edinborough, now Ottawa. From that day to this he has been at his desk in the store at eight o'clock every morning. He takes a keen interest in promoting new ideas and adapting the business to present day conditions. To a Canadian Grocer representative he spoke of the many changes in conditions affecting the grocery trade during the past forty years. He recalled the old system, the old stocks carried by the grocers, the increase in the cost of food products and the overhead expenses of the grocer. The grocery has always been looked upon as a public utility according to Mr. McGregor and in some ways as a banking institution. This grocery store which has carried the credit system from the time of its inception in the past two or three years found it necessary to do anything within reason to switch over to the cash system on account of financial conditions.

Encouraging Cash Trading

Mr. McGregor pointed out a system which they have established in their store which is aimed to encourage cash buying. The cash registers in the store automatically print a receipt for the purchase with the date stamped theron and headed "keep this receipt. We redeem it in cash." On the back of the receipt is this notice, "this receipt is worth 2% of the amount printed on the other side. We will pay cash for it any time you present it at the store." This is equivalent to 2% off on current prices and Mr. McGregor claims that it is well worth the 2% to the grocers to get the money for the groceries when they are turned over. He also stated that it has encouraged cash trading in cases where the people can well afford to pay for the groceries when they buy them, people who have previously bought on credit simply because the opportunity was afforded them.

Discount Pays Grocer

Mr. McGregor has learned through his forty years' experience that at this time particularly, the cash in hand is worth 2% at least to the grocer and that it is a paying scheme to redeem coupons either in cash or in groceries. He pointed out that the grocer with the ready cash can today buy more cheaply than the man who has to depend upon his credit. This fact is quite evident since wholesalers and manufacturers are also willing to give discounts for cash, and not only that. The grocer is not tied down to buying from any particular firm when he is able to pay cash for his purchases. In that way he is able to buy where the price is best and to a greater extent demand the service and consideration of those who would handle his accounts.

A Cure For Blue Monday

In speaking to a Canadian Grocer representative about getting a quick turnover, Mr. McGregor said:—

"Every grocer finds that Monday is a quiet day. It does not pay to have the staff idle nor does it pay to allow goods to stand over on the shelves any longer than can be helped. We have inaugurated a plan by which we increase our business on Monday, and keep the wheels turning quite as busily as other days. This plan also distributed the work of the week more evenly. On Monday our cash register turns out a special receipt for cash purchases. This receipt is printed on an orange ticket, while on other days of the week the ticket is white. These orange receipts are good for a 5 per cent. refund on the amount of the purchase printed on the face of the receipt. We have found that this brings business on Mondays and many of our customers make an effort to purchase ahead for the week on Monday so as to benefit by this 5 per cent. discount."

WE SHALL GO FORWARD

roads, has been discovered by many merchants—for instance, in the days when trolley cars were young and interurban threatened to wipe out small centres. Some of them were wiped out and died. Others perked up and grew because their merchants—or one or two of their merchants—realized that it was up to them to make trolleys serve the village as well as the cities.

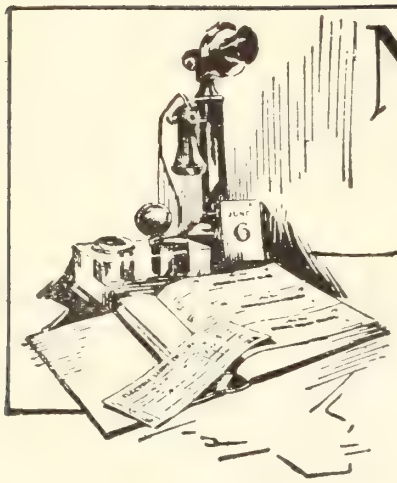
You, too, must start a back fire to offset the song of the city siren.

People everywhere expect service at non-service prices; but you don't have to give them all they want. Give them service features to the limit but do not permit yourself to be imposed on. You can sidestep gracefully if you have tact. If you have not tact, you must acquire it. Then fix prices in keeping with your service. But do not mistake the order in which I have stated this: Give the service first—in full. Then set your prices. Notice that price comes last. It always does in cases where merchants who render service are successful.

Chains Are Here To Stay

Yes; chains are a permanent feature of future retailing. But don't make too much of this. Forty years ago the bugaboo was the cash store. It was real competition where well conducted. It was stuffed with straw where not well managed. Same with chains. But chains are better managed today than ordinary stores of either cash or credit ever have been managed. That means that grocers' head-pieces must be developed and used in future. It's no joke to run a grocery store these days—or any other kind of store. But men are doing the job successfully on both plans everywhere. They will continue to do it.

I could not dare specifically to advise about a change in your system until I had full data of your business: size, capitalization, details of last year's business. I must know what proportion of your business now is credit. I must know how old you are and how long in business in that town; what other stores there are; on what plans they operate. You can send me all this if you like and I shall give it best attention. Meantime, my suggestion is to go slow about any radical change.



Novel Schemes That Have Helped Business

A Regular Picnic In This Window

To stimulate the sales on picnic supplies, a merchant in a Western Province hit upon an idea for a window display which not only proved attractive but profitable as well. The floor of the window was covered with imitation grass. This grass was simply excelsior such as used for packing, dyed a green color. In the center of the window was spread a snowy white table cover. The cover was then laid out with wooden picnic plates, paper cups, spoons, etc. On other plates were placed a variety of canned goods suitable for making sandwiches, such as canned salmon, sardines, meat pastes, peanut butter, etc. On other plates were fancy biscuits. On others, oranges and fresh tomatoes. Bottles of pickles and olives were arranged and near a tea pot was placed a package of tea, and close by was another jug with a few lemons near by. At one end of the table cloth but setting on the grass was a basket filled with all these items and including wax paper, also paper napkins. Leaning against the basket was a card reading: "Let us fill your Picnic Hamper." At the other end of the window and also forming the background were arranged larger piles of the same articles. Each pile had a small neat price card attached showing the price. The whole arrangement was very striking and sales for that week for those particular articles jumped considerably.

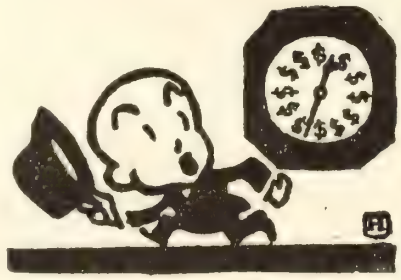
Handing the Customer a Lemon in This Case

A merchant recently took advantage of a popular phrase to advertise his soda fountain. On a neatly lettered card cut to represent a hand holding a lemon both in color and size were the words: "Come in and purchase something and let us hand you a lemon." It is hardly necessary to state that many were on the alert to know what the joke meant. On making a purchase each person was handed a card in the shape and color of a lemon. On the reverse side were words to the effect that the holder was entitled to a free glass of ice cream soda.

Playful Kittens Boost Coffee Sales

An original method of advertising their coffee was recently adopted by one grocery store. A window was dressed with a display of the goods, a space several feet long and about a foot deep being left in front of the window. This was covered with crimson cloth, and about a foot or more above the floor a number of little crimson balls of yarn were suspended with cords. This space was occupied by a cat with a family of four playful kittens whose antics with the crimson balls kept an amused crowd about the window all day long.



The connection between this display and the goods shown was made manifest by a showcard reading: "If you want to feel as full of vitality and happiness as a kitten, just try our Banquet Coffee. Nothing like it for a bracer in the morning. Makes the world look brighter all the day."

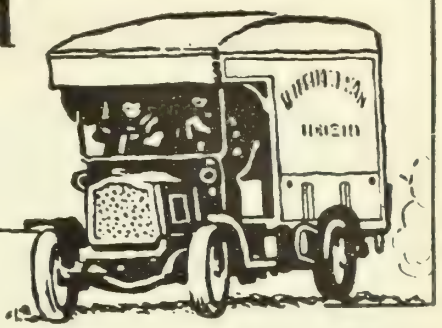
Test Tubes Are Used to Display Rice, Sago, etc.

Test tubes are generally associated, not with the grocery, but with the drug business. Yet it does not necessarily follow that the test tube cannot be used in the former. One merchant in a Western Ontario city had these test tubes working for him. He filled them with such goods as rice, sago, tapioca, shelled almonds, barley, split peas and other goods. A cork was fitted into the mouths of the tubes. A board was bored with holes and the tubes placed in them. Customers picked them up, would ask questions, and the first thing the merchant knew a sale was made. They are also frequently carried by the order taker on his trips, being easily carried in the pocket, and invariably result in orders that otherwise would not have been secured.

Finds a Novel Use for His Display Counter

A Winnipeg grocer whose store furnishings include a modern display counter, has devised an original method of brightening up his store by replacing the sample groceries in the false fronts with the advertising lithographs of various manufactures. These pictures, most of them in bright colors, make a very striking display. It has been necessary in a great many cases to cut them to the proper size without very materially affecting the general design.

Ideas That Have Proved Profitable To Other Grocers



This Idea Helps Fruit Sales for This Grocer

"For a small grocery store, we have got away with a large amount of preserving fruit this season," stated a merchant in Vancouver, B.C. "We have made a practice, for several seasons, of booking as many orders from our customers as possible in advance, for various preserving fruits, and then, going out and buying crops on the trees—and having them picked, packed and sent into the store. Any fruit in excess of immediate requirements we have preserved." A fair-sized section of the shelving on one side of the store is devoted to the various preserved fruits that have been "home-made." This merchant stated that there was a good demand for the preserved fruits, and they showed a good margin. Every grocer is not in a position to launch out in an enterprise of this kind, but it tends to show that the retail grocery business is just as broad as your interpretation of it.

This Grocer Finds it Profitable to Sell Dyes

There are some merchants who are inclined to believe that it is a poor policy to enlarge the scope of their store by selling small lines of sundries. James Hewson, of Oakville, Ont., is certainly not one of these. For instance, he sells two or three lines of dyes. Now there are merchants who say that dye is a drug store line and a merchant should leave it to these stores. Mr. Hewson disagrees. Anything is fair game that can be sold across a grocery counter. Can these dyes be sold? Emphatically yes, according to Mr. Hewson's testimony. "I have sold these dyes," he said, "to practically every one of my customers at some time or another. I do it merely by keeping the small display case of them right at the front of the counter where the housewife cannot fail to see them. It may not be a big item, but it is just that much additional to what I would otherwise have received. You don't have to sell them save by giving them a space about a foot square on your counter."

This Merchant Uses Slogans to Help Sales

Slogans may sometimes be used with good effect in increasing sales. Here are three that have proved effective for other merchants.

A Western store company uses this verse occasionally:

Be quick to kick
If things go wrong;
But kick to us,
And make it strong.
Pleasing our patrons
Gives us delight.
If we are wrong
We make things right.

In its food window a certain food was being shown. This slogan, used in many ways by the store, was on a streamer:

A word to the wives is sufficient.

Another store says:

After a trial OUR bread will be YOUR bread.

Getting New Families to Trade in His Store

A successful grocer in a Middle Western town tells his method of getting new families to trade at his store as follows:

"I go after the business of every new family that comes to town. I secure the names of new families from the newspapers, from real estate agencies, and any other available sources.

"Among my plans for getting these names is an agreement with the pastors of several churches. I say to them, in effect, 'If you will tell me the names of any new families you know of moving into your territory, I shall do the same for you.' Both the pastors and I have blanks that we fill out once a month. We both benefit by the scheme.

"Then I go to the new family in person, taking with me samples of all the advertised food products of which I have samples at the time. I give them the samples with my compliments and explain that I carry all the well-known brands and can give them the goods they know about. This appeals to them as being better than starting on new and untried foodstuffs. The sample assortment is a gift; consequently their good will and their business frequently comes to me. I keep after them with personal letters, until I feel that I have the business permanently."

Enforce Jam Standards

THE GROCERY trade is fully aware of certain conditions existing in the jam trade that should be remedied as soon as possible. It is certainly not a good thing for the industry to have manufactured some of the jams that have been put on the Canadian market during the past year. While undoubtedly some manufacturers have endeavored strongly to maintain their quality, others have not, with the result that many retailers and consumers are beginning to lose faith in our Canadian product.

The chief trouble has been the matter of price. One manufacturer finds competition strong and gets out a product to meet a price. Another follows. This makes it very difficult for the manufacturer who maintains his quality and upholds the standing of the Canadian jam industry, to sell his goods.

It is to be hoped that something can be done to enforce existing food standards on jam. Packers have been working with the Federal Department of Agriculture for some time along this line and some sort of a "policing" system for factories is suggested.

Taking Care of Stock

RECENTLY our attention was called to an incident where a merchant was endeavoring to sell canned tomatoes the labels of which had become soiled. These goods were in extremely bad condition. The labels were dirty and the tins had become rusted and although the contents of the tins were in good shape, the appearance was so much against them, that as far as the public was concerned, the goods were a direct loss to the merchant. Investigation showed that these goods had been piled in an undesirable warehouse for two years. As the warehouse was not heated, the cans had frozen and when thawing the cans naturally sweated, rusting the cans and soiling the labels.

The importance of properly taking care of stock has frequently been commented upon in the columns of Canadian Grocer and this instance is just one of the many which representatives of this paper have run across in calling upon the retail trade throughout the Dominion. There are some merchants either through their own carelessness or that of their clerks, who persist in piling new goods in front of the previous shipment. The goods become stale, the labels and packages dirty and unattractive. This carelessness not only depreciates the value and affects the profits for the merchants but it is an injustice to the manufacturer.

Undoubtedly every manufacturer retains an interest in his goods long after they have left the factory, and in fact his interest does not usually end until the goods are actually consumed. That being the case it is a small matter for the merchant, whenever he happens to find packaged goods the labels of which have, through neglect or otherwise, become soiled, to notify such manufacturer for a supply of new labels. Merchants will find manufacturers only too glad to assist in any way possible the moving off of such goods with as little loss as possible to the merchant. The moral of this, however, is that merchants cannot be too careful in looking after stock, thus eliminating such leaks.

Steadying Butter Prices

THE MANAGER of a large produce house stated to the writer the other day that margarine has the effect of steadying butter prices. He based his opinions on the present condition of the butter market. "Foreign butter and storage supplies are practically cleaned up, and new-made butter is not yet arriving in sufficient volume to affect butter prices to any extent," he said. "There is no doubt dairy interests would have embraced the opportunity to boost prices on butter if it was not for the fact that they were afraid to do so, because many people would have refused to pay the higher price and used more margarine."

This dealer also claims that margarine has been the chief reason why the standard of butter to-day is so much better than a few years ago. He points out that makers of dairy butter now realize that if the quality of the butter they make is not of good quality, consumers will not buy it, and will buy margarine instead, not only because it is lower in price but also because it has a better flavor than much of the dairy butter. Many makers of dairy butter have ceased making butter, and are now sending their cream to the factories, resulting in a higher standard of quality, this produce man claims.

Whether these arguments can be substantiated or not, one cannot help thinking that his arguments are food for thought and offer another reason why a wholesome article of food should not be barred from Canadian consumers.

C. J. Giraud and Mr. Reggio, representing the firm of C. J. Giraud & Co. of Smyrna, Greece, were in Montreal last week calling on their local representatives, John T McBride & Co.

H. Desjardins, who for some time past has represented the Heintz Co. Ltd., in Montreal, has now joined the staff of Laporte, Martin Co. Ltd., wholesale grocers of Montreal and will act as a specialty salesman.

L. C. Chaput, whose grocery store was burned out during the fire that destroyed the Vimy block on Sherbrooke St. W., Montreal, in January last, is now building a block of his own a few streets west of the old location. This new block will contain his own grocery as well as other stores and some apartments.

J. Coleman, who has taken over the grocery store of W. Brown at the corner of St. Mark and St. Catherine Sts., Montreal, has had the front of the store remodelled, affording larger window space as well as giving a bigger entrance to the store. Mr. Coleman spent fourteen years as clerk in Walter Paul's grocery and seven years with R. Walsh's grocery.

Harry Horne, president of the Harry Horne Company, Toronto, was in Montreal last week in connection with the opening of an office there. The Montreal firm will go under the name of Cole, Knight & Horne, with offices at 715 Drummond Bldg. Mr. Cole was formerly of Charles H. Cole Company of Toronto, and Mr. Knight was a salesman with The Harold F. Ritchie Company of Toronto.

The packing of Columbia River salmon along the Columbia River will be delayed this season on acount of high water, according to word received from Seattle. As a result canners do not expect to pack chinooks until July.

An Interesting Program Will Mark Grocers' Convention This Month

Between Five and Six Hundred Retail Grocers Will Attend Big Gathering to be Held in Toronto on May 17 and 18—Ontario Grocers Should Endeavor to Be Present

IT IS expected that between five and six hundred grocers will attend the convention for Ontario grocers to be held on the 17th and 18th of this month at the Prince George Hotel, Toronto. The gathering is being arranged by the Retail Merchants' Association, and promises to be one of the most interesting of its kind ever held. The grocer will be repaid for the time spent, judging from the matters of vital interest that are to be discussed. While the program in its entirety has not yet been drafted, a number of well informed speakers are being lined up, and they will have something worth while to tell the retail grocer. A representative of the Health department at Ottawa will in all probability be present and will give a talk on the pure food laws. The subject of closer co-operation between the wholesaler and the retailer will be discussed by representatives of both sections of trade. The canned goods situation will come up for discussion, as well as proper channels of distribution, new forms of competition, etc. E. M. Trowern, Dominion Secretary of the Retail Merchant's Associations will be present, and Ottawa Grocers' section is sending a delegation of fifteen.

A number of entertainment features are being provided including a drive about the city, a visit to some of the food manufacturing plants in the city, and a theatre party.

Every Retailer Will Now Purchase Through Wholesale Trade on the Same Basis

Soap Companies in Canada Make Changes in Their Preferred List of Buyers—Now Quote a Twenty-five Case Price Which is Considerably Lower Than the Five Case Price

A SHORT time ago a number of the soap companies in Canada, decided to make some changes in their preferred list of buyers. As the trade well knows there have been for some years a number of retail firms which have been able to secure the jobbers' discount when buying direct.

Canadian Grocer discussed this the other day with J. E. Ganong, president of Lever Bros. with a view to finding the reason for this change.

Mr. Ganong mentioned that years ago there were a few retailers who were put on the preferred list for one reason or another and kept on due to friendship of long-standing. "The soap companies have ever since been approached regularly by others to get on this preferred list of buyers and in a number of cases it has caused some little friction because it was not considered desirable to add to the list. So in order that we might place every retailer on the same basis, we recently came to the conclusion it would be better to have every one purchase through the wholesale trade," he added. "In doing this we have made a special arrangement whereby there will be a twenty-five case price which is considerably lower than the five case price, and on the larger quantity the wholesalers discount is less, so that the retailer who is in position to purchase in such a quantity, secures a somewhat better price."

Mr. Ganong pointed out that the only exceptions to this rule were some of the large department stores and a number of the chain stores which purchase practically in car load quantities.

Tests Cider Vinegar in Enforcement of Pure Food Laws

Ottawa.—The Department of Health in Ottawa is now conducting a series of tests in the chemical laboratories on specimens of so-called "cider vinegar" collected throughout Canada. R. B. McGregor, the chief chemist in the department, told a Canadian Grocer representative that these tests were being made in order to determine whether or not the samples complied with the standard set by the department which defines the different food products according to name. There is a suspicion that some of the vinegars sold as cider vinegar are chemical preparations which are not true products of the fruit.

According to the regulation of the Department of Health cider vinegar is a product made by the normal alcoholic fermentations of apple juice, and the usual cellar treatment, and contains not more than 7 per cent. by volume of alcohol and in 100 cubit centimeters (20c) of the cider and not less than 2 grams no more than 12 grams of solid and no more than 8 grams of sugar, in terms of reducing sugars, and not less than 20 centigrams nor more than 40 centigrams of cider ash. This definition or regulation is to insure that a product sold as cider vinegar shall be made from apples and is a protection for the fruit growers of Canada.

Mr. McGregor stated that the fruit growers, particularly those in Western Ontario, had complained that there was unfair competition in the market in cider vinegar by the manufacturers of vinegar through a chemical process. The government is determined to enforce the Act in this regard so that those purchasing cider vinegar shall be buying the true product. He also stated that the product made by the chemical process, being similar in taste to the real vinegar can be made much cheaper than that from the apples and thereby those manufacturing the real cider vinegar are handicapped in the market. Samples are being taken from retail grocery stores throughout the country and tested at the government laboratories at Ottawa. No report has yet been made by the Department of Health in this connection but it is stated that as soon as the report is submitted that some prosecutions will be made.

Wholesaler Only Signs Lease for Chain Store Property

Montreal.—An interesting fact has come to light in connection with the ownership of a certain chain of grocery stores in this city. Some time ago a local wholesaler asked about the ownership of this chain but he denied any knowledge of either the ownership or the management. It so happens that another wholesale grocer in this city owned property in one of the suburbs which was desired by this chain of grocery stores. The deal was put through and perhaps thoughtlessly the lease for the building was signed by the member of the wholesale firm who had claimed no connection with the chain of stores mentioned.

QUEBEC HOTELS MUST POST PRICES OF ACCOMMODATION

Quebec.—Among the laws which come in force on the first of May is one of great interest to the traveling public. This law compels hotel owners to post in the entrance of their establishments, in the bedrooms and dining rooms, prices of accommodation under its various heads. These posters are bi-lingual and will permit guests to know exactly what they are liable to pay for lodging and food.

WESTERN CANADA NEWS

Western

E. A. Rankin has joined the sales staff of Gibson Paterson, Winnipeg, and will be devoting his attention to the wholesale trade.

L. C. Christenson, representing Hard and Rand of New York, is on a business trip to Winnipeg, and called on his firm's western representatives, Donald H. Bain Co.

E. R. Regelous, formerly with the Hudson Bay Co., has joined the sales staff of Nicholson-Rankin Ltd., Winnipeg, and will be calling on the wholesale trade in the interests of this firm.

Donaldson Phillips Agencies, Vancouver, have been appointed agents for Barker & Dobson, Ltd., of Everton, Liverpool, Eng. The line comprises chocolates, cachous, glass goods and toffee.

Winnipeg Firm Celebrates Its 42nd Anniversary

W. L. MacKenzie & Co., manufacturers' agents, Winnipeg, are celebrating this month, their 42nd anniversary in business. They began business on May 12, 1880, as representatives for W. C. Macdonald, now W. C. Macdonald Regd. of Montreal, and later became agents for W. Clark, Limited, also of Montreal. W. L. MacKenzie carried on the business until 1903 when he took on the staff Geo J. Cameron who in 1907 assumed the actual management. Mr. MacKenzie died in 1920 at the ripe old age of 88 years. Mr. Cameron enjoys a unique distinction of being head of a firm older than himself.

New R. M. A. Branch is Organized at Merritt, B. C.

B. H. Peeps, provincial organizer of the Retail Merchants' Association in British Columbia, has completed the organization of a branch at Merritt, B. C. The following officers were elected:—President, G. B. Armstrong; 1st vice-president, P. Boyd; 2nd vice-president, H. Winch; secretary, D. Bellshaw.

The provincial secretary, Geo. Hougham states that the forming of the branch at Merritt completes the organization work in the interior for the present. Mr. Peeps will return to Vancouver.

Will Pledge Support of Any Measure for Price Maintenance

Victoria, B. C., April 24.—At the present time a petition is rapidly being signed up, in which the retail grocers of Victoria pledge their loyal support to such price maintenance measures as their association may be able to put forward.

When manufacturers are asked to subscribe to the principle of maintained prices, their first query is, "And supposing that we maintain our prices, have we any guarantee that the retailers whom you purport to represent will be guided by your suggestions and instructions?" The petition when signed will be an indication of the general demand for some sane treatment of the present chaotic merchandising condition.

Use of Spring Scales

Action is being taken by the Retail Merchants' Association toward getting police enforcement of the laws already standing dealing with the use of spring scales. The Orientals are the chief offenders and it is hoped that the hand spring scales employed by these people may be placed under the ban.

Readers of this issue of Canadian Grocer are referred to the index pages of both reading and advertising matter, the former being found on page 164 and the latter on page 166. As grocers will have occasion no doubt to refer to matter in this Spring and Summer number from time to time, a mental note of these pages will save a lot of time.

This Method is Better Than the Ordinary Bill

J. P. Hanson, proprieter of the Weldon Cash Grocery and fruit house, at Weldon, Sask, has what seems to be an original idea in filling orders. Mr. Hanson has had a list printed, and uses it instead of the ordinary bill used in the majority of stores. The various lines of merchandise are arranged alphabetically. This overcomes the possibility of mistakes, Mr. Weldon believes. As is often the case when a bill is hastily filled out, it is hard sometimes even for the writer to make it out. By using the bill of Mr. Hanson the customer takes it home and can see at a glance what has been bought. As the Weldon district is mostly settled by foreigners, Mr. Hanson has found the introduction of this bill necessary.

CURRENT NEWS

Montreal Wholesale Grocers' Guild is Not to Disband

Montreal, (Special)—The executive of the Montreal Wholesale Grocers' Guild held a meeting last week in the office of the Board of Trade. It was then unanimously decided that the guild should not be disbanded but that it should carry on although it will have no jurisdiction over its members as far as price, equalized rates, etc., are concerned. The president, E. Couvrette, stated to Canadian Grocer representative immediately after the meeting that the officers had decided not to hand in their resignations but to carry on with those members who continued to ally themselves with the guild. The treasurer, N. Gendreau, added that the finances of the guild were in a splendid condition and that his instructions were to continue the duties of treasurer as though nothing had happened. It is admitted however that one or two members of the guild have formally handed in their resignations.

Parkdale Business Men Observe Spring Cleaning Month

The Parkdale Business Men's Association made the past month a spring cleaning month in Parkdale, Toronto, and every person conducting business in that section of the city was asked to carry out as far as possible the following suggestions:—

1. Clean up the front of your place of business.

2. Give it a fresh coat of paint if it requires it.

3. Let your light so shine before your customers that they may see your good merchandise.

4. Brighten up the interior of your premises. Increased business will surely result.

5. Make your place of business a credit to Parkdale.

WEEKLY GROCERY MARKET REPORTS

Statements from Buying Centres.

MARKETS AT A GLANCE

THE New York raw sugar market had a decidedly stronger tone during the week with heavy business transpiring. It is reported that approximately 350,000 bags of Cuban sugars were sold to refiners and operators at 2½c c. & f. New York, which figures to 4.11c duty paid. Prices on the f.o.b. Cuban basis advanced from 2.23c to 2.35c with sales reported of 3,000 tons for May shipment at 2.46c St. John's and also 6,000 tons for May and June shipment at 2½c c. & f. Montreal. New York refiners after declining to $5.25 per cwt. for standard granulated advanced to $5.30 and $5.40, but since then we hear that one refiner has reverted to $5.25, claiming it was done to meet competition.

Two declines are recorded in Canadian refined sugar, making a total of 25c and bringing the price to $5.90 basis Montreal. There is no great activity at these declines due partly to the lack of consumer demand and partly to the lack of confidence in the trade, but the opinion is expressed that refiners of sugar are selling below replacement basis. On the other hand we understand that certain Canadian refiners are participating in large export business.

The harvesting of the Cuban crop appears to be rapidly closing. Cables to hand report 170 centrals grinding, indicating that 15 factories have closed for the season, the total of which was 185 as compared with 187 last year.

Changes are not numerous in other grocery commodities but there appears to be more stability in primary conditions. In Montreal and Toronto particularly there is still considerable price cutting among the wholesale trade which has created much unrest and lack of confidence.

Canned vegetables and fruits continue to be in active demand. All grades of peas with the exception of standards are closely cleaned up with standards also becoming in small compass. Canned fish is also indicating a better movement.

No new developments are noted in teas. The market, however, is quite strong. Cereals are fairly steady while rices are strong and advancing.

Prunes, apricots and peaches are strongly held while stocks of evaporated apples are practically exhausted with advancing prices. Raisins continue to show weakness.

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, May 3.—Price cutting still keeps the local grocery market in an uncertain condition. Despite another reduction in refined sugar local wholesalers are still quoting below the list price and many of the retail grocers are taking advantage of the market and buying for the future. Canned goods continue to be cut without regard to cost. Molasses is lower on account of recent shipments and lower values in primary market as well as price cutting. The tea market is strong but local conditions have prevented an advance. One brand of package tea is advanced. There is little change in the spice markets except in package and branded lines in which celery salt and celery pepper and paprika are reduced. Coffee is strong but without any change. The rice market is bullish according to primary reports and local prices are firm but below cost of replacement. The nut market is quiet save for gathering strength in walnuts abroad and an inclination to buy for future amongst the local trade. Evaporated apples are advanced three cents following recent advances at the evaporators.

CUTTING IN CANNED GOODS

Montreal

CANNED GOODS—Prices on canned goods in Montreal are purely nominal. Cutting in almost all lines is general. Corn is being sold in some instances as low as 90c per doz. Tomatoes and peas are also cut and in canned fruits extremely low prices are quoted. Canned plums that cost $1.85 are sold at $1 per doz., but it must be noted that wholesalers are finding it expedient to unload these stocks as quickly as possible. Raymond's compound jams are reduced. The four pound tins are quoted at $5.70 a doz. Raymond's National brand tomato catchup is advanced 5c a doz. on the 12 oz. bottles to $1.45 a doz.

POT BARLEY REDUCED

Montreal

CEREALS—Millers state that the market for cereals is firm but local cutting continues, particularly in rolled oats. Pot barley in bag lots is reduced 15c and is now quoted at $3.25 per bag or 4c per lb. in small lots. The demand for cereals is quiet and buying is for small lots to meet immediate requirements.

STRONG FUTURE FOR WALNUTS

Montreal

NUTS—It is interesting to note that prices on shelled walnuts on spot are higher than the present import cost but recent cables state that prices are moving upwards and importers are holding the present price in expectancy of an advance abroad. A number of large orders have been placed for future delivery at the present price, which shows that there is confidene in this market. Locally there has been a reduction in Bordeaux shelled walnuts making the price 65c in case lots, and 67c in 13-lb. boxes. The peanut market is easy and prices show ½c decline. Low prices are quoted on Brazil nuts and the demand is continuing good into the spring season. Lower prices are quoted on account and shredded cocoanut is quoted at 21c per lb.

DRIED APPLES ADVANCE

Montreal

DRIED FRUITS—The dried fruit market is quiet with the only important change, an advance in evaporated apples, making the local price 24c per lb. This advance is a result of previous advances in the price at the evaporators. There is a good export demand for evaporated apples and a likelihood that prices will go still higher with a scarcity of supplies. Peels are quiet with a weakness in orange and lemon and strength in citron for the fall. There are no changes in price, however, and these tendencies are the summary of future conditions. The prune market is unchanged with prices holding firm at the Coast and higher than quotations in New York. Dealers are still firm in the opinion that prune prices will be higher in the near future or just as soon as the New York market is cleaned up. Currants and raisins are quiet with a steady tone.

MORE CUTS IN SUGAR

Montreal

SUGAR.—The refiners' price has been reduced to $5.90 per cwt. and $5.85 in one particular case. Local wholesalers are, however, quoting as low as $5.75 per bag at warehouse. The price here is below the New York market when duty and freight is added. Since the refiners' price has been forced down despite the firm tone of the raw market it is evident that some change must come. Local conditions, however, do not favor an advance immediately but it is hardly likely that any further reductions will be made. In view of the fact that the season for the biggest consumption of sugar is near at hand many retailers are laying aside surplus stocks of granulated sugar at the present price.

TEA GATHERS STRENGTH

Montreal

TEA—The tea market maintains its strength but there have been no recent advances in the wholesale trade locally. Present conditions do not favor an advance and wholesalers have not taken advantage of the full strength of primary markets. Some small advances have been made in recent weeks which have affected the retail price of tea, but the opinion is expressed that more advances are to follow just as soon as the local market is stablilized. Minto package teas have been advanced to 55c per lb. In all sizes and other package teas may be expected to advance in the near future.

MOLASSES REDUCED

Montreal

MOLASSES—Recent shipments of molasses to Montreal have had a weakening effect on the market and prices show a decline. For the city of Montreal the price is 59c and 60c in puncheons and in barrels 63c. Outside of the city a price of 57c in puncheons is quoted. Local wholesalers state that in the past the price of molasses has been too high and that the present quotation is about the fair level for the market under present conditions. The forced weakness in sugar has had some effect on molasses and buying is limited to supplies for immediate requirements. There is no change in the market for corn syrup. Prices are firm with a fair demand.

Montrea

SOAPS.—The soap market is in a little more settled condition. Much of the price cutting has been discontinued in this line since it was found decidedly unprofitable. The general price is now $6.50 per case for the standard brands.

BULLISHNESS IN RICE

Montreal

RICE.—Although there was a weak tone a little time ago in rice, late reports lend a bullish tone with a small advance. Figures show that there is scarcely one million bags of rice to tide the trade over till August, and a strong tone is evident locally, particularly since local prices are much below cost of replacement.

NEW VEGETABLES LOWER

Montreal

VEGETABLES.—Lower prices are quoted on most new vegetables and the demand is heavy. Tomatoes are firmer in price but show little change. Celery and cabbages are slightly higher. Asparagus is lower and bigger supplies of Egyptian onions have broken the price generally. Texas onions are down to $3.50 a crate and Egyptians at $6.50 a bag. Cucumbers are plentiful and lower. Green peas, new turnips and parsley are now quoted.

CHANGES IN PACKAGE CEREALS

Montreal

PACKAGE GOODS.—The feature of the package goods market is some changes in prepared cereals. Kellogg's toasted corn flakes, both brands, are now quoted at $3.40 per case or $1.20 per doz. Krinkle corn flakes is also quoted at $3.40 per case. Locally Quaker corn flakes are offered at a cut price. Wholesalers here are quoting $2.40 per case or 80c per doz. Shredded Wheat is reduced 15c per case and is now quoted at $4.10, or $1.45 per doz.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, May 3.—Refined sugar made two declines during the week, bringing the price to $6.24. There is still considerable irregularity in wholesale prices which are below refiners' official list. Bulk cereals hold steady but Shredded Wheat and some brands of corn flakes show reductions. Canned vegetables and fruits continue active with quotations firm and unchanged. Coffees and teas are strong with some grades of teas advanced. Prunes hold firm while raisins continue to indicate weakness. Shelled nuts are easier with local quotations showing reductions. Corn syrups and molasses are unchanged but Lyle's sugar syrup is slightly lower. The rice markets are in a strong tone with primary markets a shade higher. Fresh tomatoes and Texas onions are stronger while cucumbers, asparagus and spinach are lower.

ACTIVITY IN CANNED GOODS

Toronto

CANNED GOODS.—An active demand continues for canned vegetables and fruits. Canned peas are rapidly becoming cleaned up. Stocks of standard grades of peas are small and the better grades are getting harder to find. Corn and tomatoes, although more plentiful than peas are strongly held. Fruits, especially peaches and strawberries have an active inquiry. Other fruits are also moving satisfactory. The pack of fruits last season was very light which together with the ready sale, will result in the market being closely cleaned up by the time the new packs are available. New pack California spinach is now offered: Delmonte brand No. 2 tins at $2.25 per doz.; Gold Bar No. 2 tins at $2.25 per doz. and Libby's No. 10 tins, $9.50 per doz. Libby's Sour Kraut, 2½s, is quoted at $1.75 per doz. Grated Hawaiian Pineapple, No. 2 tins, is offered at $2.40 per doz.

NEW PACKAGE DATES

Toronto

DRIED FRUITS.— Quotations on dried fruits show practically no change with no new features developing in the market situation. Dromedary dates are now offered in a new size package, packed 48 to the case, retailing at 10c per package and quoted to the trade at $3.90 per case. Sair dates are offered to arrive at 6¾c per lb. Raisins continue to indicate weakness, reports both from the Coast and New York state that there is a feeling that prices will have to be lower in order to stimulate buying and move off the heavy stocks.

FURTHER REDUCTION ON SUGAR

Toronto.

SUGAR.— Refined sugar registered two declines since we went to press a week ago. The first was on Friday amounting to 15c and the second on Saturday of 10c, making a total of 25c and bringing the Montreal basis to $5.90 which figures to $6.24 delivered Toronto. Lack of confidence still appears to be the feature in the local market in spite of the fact that refiners claim sugar is now being sold at below replacement costs. Wholesalers continue to cut prices' the average of which is around $6. There also seems to be some irregularity in refiners prices, which has created a very upset situation.

TOMATOES AND ONIONS FIRM

Toronto

VEGETABLES.—Texas onions are quoted at $3.75 per case but the market is in a strong position with a likelihood for advances. Florida tomatoes are also firmer with prices on the larger sizes advanced, making 216s, $3.25: 180s, $4.50: and 144s, $5.50 per case. New beets and carrots are arriving in bushel baskets and quoted at $3. Hamper cucumbers are lower at $4.50. California asparagus is lower at $5.50 to $7.50 per case of 12 large bunches. Spinach is selling freely at $2.50 per bushel.

STRONG RICE MARKET

Toronto.

RICES.—Locally there is little change in the rice situation but quotations are firmly maintained and in some quarters it is claimed that present prices are lower than replacement costs and when stocks arrive bought at the higher basis of values, prices to the trade will be higher. This condition applies to both Southern and Oriental rices.

MANITOBA MARKETS

WINNIPEG, May 3.—Farmers are now working on the land and seeding is in full force. The general business situation shows little definite change and confidence in the future is being shown more, both in wholesale and the retail circles. Coffees continue to show strength in primary market but there is little change in spot conditions. Canned vegetables and fruits are showing a good spring movement and it is generally considered that supplies will be well cleaned up before the new packs arrive. There has been no radical change in the dried fruit market. Raisins are easier and the decline in prunes has been checked. Evaporated apples, peaches and apricots are in small supply and the shortage is reflected in higher prices. The cereal market is ruling steady with prices fully maintained. The rice market continues firm but inactive. The New York raw sugar market is in an unsettled condition but there is no change locally. The primary tea markets show little change as compared with a week ago and as quotations to the retail trade are below replacement value advances can be expected in the near future. Fruit business is reported quiet but with better weather conditions an improvement is expected. Pineapples and strawberries are in fair demand. Asparagus and spinach are now offered on this market.

CANNED GOODS STEADY

Winnipeg.

CANNED GOODS.—Like some other foods canned fish is in limited demand. There is no change in the canned salmon situation and the new pack winter lobsters which have arrived are becoming scarce and indications point to a light summer pack with higher prices. There is a moderate demand for sardines with quotations on the better grades showing a slight advance. Each week indicates a general shortage in supplies of canned vegetables and a firmer tone to the market. Canadian packers are practically sold out on certain lines and it will be five months before the new packs arrive on the market. Some American peas are offered to take care of the shortage of Canadian. California canned fruits are higher. Peaches, apricots, and pineapple are firmer locally as well as primary markets.

DRIED FRUITS UNCHANGED

Winnipeg.

DRIED FRUITS.—Little change has occurred in the dried fruit market. The decline in prunes has been checked but locally there is no change and there is not likely to be any change in prices. Evaporated apples are scarce and higher. Peaches and apricots are in small supply and the shortage reflects itself in higher prices. Some lines of raisins on the primary market have shown an easier tone but the demand locally is very satisfactory. Currants are easy in tone as they are influenced largely by the raisin situation.

RICE CONTINUES FIRM

Winnipeg.

RICE.—The rice market continues firm but not active. Considerable strength exists at southern markets as well as oriental. Supplies are limited and although in moderate demand the market is maintaining a firm tone.

NO CHANGE IN SUGAR

Winnipeg.

SUGAR.—The raw sugar market is in an unsettled condition and this seems to have the effect of keeping buyers from purchasing heavily on refined. Wholesalers' prices to the retail trade are ranging from $7.15 to $7.25.

SYRUPS IN DEMAND

Winnipeg.

SYRUPS.—Trading in the local market for corn and cane syrups is steady and buyers continue to purchase supplies in small volumes at unchanged quotations. There are no new features in the molasses market, the demand is mostly confined to small lots for immediate needs at the prevailing prices.

PINEAPPLE IN DEMAND

Winnipeg

FRUITS.—Business is reported quiet by wholesale fruit dealers but as the warmer weather approaches an improvement is expected. Pineapples are arriving in good quantities and are meeting with ready sales at $8 per case. Arkansas and Missouri strawberries are expected to be lower. Quotations at present are around $10 per case of 24 qts. Navel oranges are quoted at $8.50 to $9.50 with Valencia from $8 to $9. Lemons remain unchanged. THE WEEKLY HALF HOLIDAY

IN many cities, towns and villages throughout the Dominion, merchants will be closing one afternoon each week and as in other years Canadian Grocer will again publish a list of the municipalities wherein there is a half holiday each week. It is important that this list be accurate and that every locality be represented as business houses have found this list a valuable one in assisting them to plan the trips of their representatives.

We therefore request merchants to fill in this coupon and return at their earliest convenience.

Refrigerator Display Counters Increase Sales of Meats for This Firm—The Adams Grocery, Lindsay, Ont., Operate Meat Department in Connection With Store and Find the Two Make a Good Combination

"GLASS enclosed refrigerator counters certainly have increased the sales of meats in our business," J. E. Adams of the Adams' Grocery, Lindsay, Ont., told a representative of Canadian Grocer the other day. Tihs firm has one of the finest meat departments in connection with their grocery, as is to be found in Eastern Ontario. It is a store alongside of the grocery, and is equally as large, with its own entrance, and windows for display. However, it is not necessary to go outside to go from one to the other, an archway making it possible for the shopper to step from the grocery into the meat store and vice versa. Fresh meats, fowl, as well as the smoked and cooked varieties of meats are carried.

A Slicer is Valuable Aid

Equipment for the convenient handling of these commodities is everywhere apparent. In addition to the counters which are kept at an even temperature all the time, there are scales so situated as to facilitate service, and a meat slicer just at one end of the glass enclosed counter.

"We have had that slicer for the past seven years and we could not get along without it now," Mr. Adams remarked. "There is scarcely any waste in cutting up bacon and cooked meats with that slicer. It cuts up the meats at a uniform thickness all the time, and enables us to give our customers better service. In the summer months particularly it makes for a quicker handling of customers, at a time when there is a great demand for the cooked meats, and people want to be waited on in a hurry.

40 Hams A Week In Summer

"Our sales of boiled hams last summer averaged 15 a week, in addition to 25 roast hams and 6 tongues. We do a fairly large summer resort trade, filling orders for delivery at the lake points every day, and the cooked meats are called for a great deal. Display of these meats in the refrigerator counter has had a great deal to do with the increasing demand for them, as far as our business is concerned. Kept at a uniform temperature of cold, they are always in first-class condition, and present a tempting appearance.

"We sell chiefly only one brand of bacon in our meat department. We believe this particular bacon is as good as any that can be bought, and the better class of our customers demand it. We have some inquiry for cheaper grades, but the bulk of inquiries are for the best, and the one brand. In the summer month we cut up eighteen sides of this bacon every week. We have been handling it now for a long time. Our customers like it better than any other."

That a meat department can be run in connection with a grocery store there is no doubt, according to the opinion of the Adams' Grocery, Ltd. They are finding the combination a success and believe that one department assists the sales in the other. Customers always find it an advantage to buy their groceries and meats in the same place. The fact that they can step from one store to the other without going outside is a convenience that is appreciated. In this way the sales in both sections are stimulated.

Sales of sausages run to a very considerable amount in this store. Supplies are always freshly made, and this is a strong point in maintaining sales of sausages at satisfactory levels. Every care is taken to sell only sausages, the quality of which cannot be disputed.

This Merchant Likes to Hand-pick His Credit Customers

Vancouver.—Braidwoods' Market on Commercial Drive, Vancouver, is doing a credit business—but—says Mr. Braidwood, "I hand-pick my credit customers. A merchant owes it to himself to make the strictest inquiry before lending money to strangers, for that it what extending credit means."

In this store a double business is conducted by Mr. Braidwood—a grocer and a butcher business. These two lines, according to this merchant work splendidly together, each strengthening the custom of the other. The one accounting system and delivery truck takes care of both departments. Mr. Braidwood has high praise for the Government Standard Grading of eggs. He recieves fresh eggs from a poultry ranch three times a week. These are graded according to government standards and the customers express themselves as greatly pleased with the system that gives them exactly what they are paying for. "The customer is better pleased. We are assured a fairer margin, and the rancher receives exactly what the quality of his eggs entitles him to. Everybody is pleased," said Mr. Braidwood.

Ask for Removal of Express Rates Made in January, 1921

Montreal.—Representatives of the fishing industry called upon the government at Ottawa a week ago to request that the advance in express rates that was made in January 1921, be taken off as it had been instrumental in increasing the cost of fresh fish and so hurting the industry. The government gave the delegation a hearing but made no promises. A. H. Britton, of the Maritime Fish Corporation, who represented the local interests, stated to a Canadian Grocer representative that although the government promised to take the matter up, no reply had been received, nor had they been given any hope that their request would be granted.

Slicing Cooked Meats to Avoid Loss

Cuts Whole Hams Into Slices at One Time, and Arranging Slices in Parcels of Pounds and Half Pounds, Not One Slice Has to be Sold at a Sacrifice—Selling Cooked Meats in the Hot Weather

By Staff Correspondent Canadian Grocer

MONTREAL.—Cooked meats offer the grocer or provision dealer a new field in the summer months. While some grocery stores do not regularly handle meats, on account of the lack of a special meat department, cooked meats can be taken care of in the ordinary refrigerator in the store and sold steadily with little trouble or risk. Naturally there are some ways of getting just a little more out of the line if the grocer takes an interest in it and a few precautions, so the profits will not be eaten up by wastage.

Sanitary Methods Advertise Meats

Harry Bessner, proprietor of Bessner's Market, 779 St. Catharine St., Montreal, has specialized in this line for a number of years and knows what the people buy in the summer, when they buy it and very often why they buy it. These things, he claims, a buyer must know if he would guard against stocking the wrong line or too much of one thing. In speaking to a Canadian Grocer representative about the summer trade in meats, he said, "People are cautious in buying meats during the hot weather, and the display in the store has much to do with the sales. Every one realizes that the demand runs towards cooked meats but even at that the grocer must take particular care to see that it is turned over as quickly as possible. If it is evident to the people that the grocer has taken a real interest in his cooked meat department, that is the best advertisement he can have, better even than saying so in letters a foot high. Hams on the cutting machine should be covered to keep off the flies, yet if possible the meat should be in plain view. Glass covers or screens are good but the best plan is to take the whole rack with the piece of meat on it off the knife and place it in a conspicuous place in the refrigerator. It is not much of a task to replace the rack on the machine when the customer has given the order.

A Cool Store Helps Sales

"Another precaution is to keep the store as cool as possible. If the customers feel that the place is hot and stuffy, it emphasizes the fact that hot weather is hard on meats and it is all the harder to make the sale. Cleanliness and quality are absolutely essential in the selling of cooked meats. To get quality there must be a quick turnover and to get the turnover, the grocer must have the inclination to push the meats and the judgment to buy just what is required.

Cutting to Avoid Loss

It is the easiest thing in the world to sell a large quantity of cooked meats and yet lose money. Care must be taken in cutting. If the movement of a particular piece of meat, for instance a ham, warrants it, it is a good plan to cut up the whole during a quiet part of the day. Then wrap the meat up in pound and half pound lots, being careful to include one slice of the part near the end in each parcel. These parcels can be wrapped in oiled paper and placed in the refrigerator or in a refrigerating counter. In this way the grocer can sell the whole ham without any loss. Otherwise when the dealer gets to the end of a ham, the customer will refuse the piece or ask that a new ham be put on the machine. Who is going to lose on the butt end? No customer will ever notice a small end piece in a parcel if the other slices are choice.

A One-Man Job

"Personally I favor making the cooked meat counter a one-man job. I find that it pays to have a man specialize in this line in the summer time. He will take an interest in making sales that the whole staff would not, if no one in particular were responsible. The meats require constant attention. The sales have to be made with care, for of all the lines in a store nothing offers a bigger opportunity for loss than cooked meats in hot weather. Then, too, sales depend largely upon the display. These have to be made carefully at the right time in

Is Not Position of Dairy Interests On The Oleomargarine Question Illogical?

Argument That Oleomargarine Affects the Price of Butter is Unsound for the Reason That Oleomargarine is a Competitor Only to the Extent of 4½ Per Cent. of Production

A REMARKABLE position is taken by the opponents of oleomargarine who are in reality extremists in seeking non-tariff protection for the dairy interests. They claim that the product enters into unfair competition with the home farmer because they state that it is made of foreign, imported oils. Now nothing is farther from the truth. Oleomargarine as manufactured in Canada is made of materials of which three-quarters are taken almost directly from Canadian farms.

Oleomargarine as we in this country know it differs essentially from margarines made of vegetable and nut oils. These are manufactured from oils (or fats, which chemically are oils in solid form, or, in other words, oils are fats at a different melting temperature) that are obtained not from farm animals but from crushed seeds, such as cottonseed and the kernels of the cocoanut palm. It is said that the final product does not differ greatly from oleomargarine made from animal oils, in as much as all fats are in the last analysis almost identical in their nutritive values.

Dairy Interests Are Illogical

But there is this point to be noted about oleomargarine—it is composed chiefly of oleo oil and neutral, two fats which are pressed direct from the carcasses of farm animals and are afterwards highly refined. In addition butter and milk are used in our domestic product, chiefly for the sake of giving to the mixture that "butter" taste which the public demand. Now these four ingredients make up from seventy to seventy-five per cent. of the total content of oleomargarine. Each of these is the distinct outcome of Canadian farm production.

How, therefore, can the dairy interests logically oppose the manufacture of oleomargarine within the Dominion on competition? Indeed the present Minister of Agriculture, Hon. W. R. Motherwell, is plainly under an erroneous impression for he recently said in Toronto:

"You breeders, in asking the old reliable dairy cow to set up in competition with the by-products of large packing houses and vegetable oils of tropical countries, used largely in the manufacture of oleomargarine, are rather over-taxing and asking too much of her. To compel the Ontario dairy cows to submit to such conditions under trying circumstances in open competition with packing houses I consider unfair."

Will Go To American Manufacturers

The position needs defining clearly. The great bulk of the margarine used in Great Britain—while not a whit less nutritive and palatable than our own product—is made of vegetable and nut oils. Consumption during the war showed a remarkable change from the animal fat margarine to the vegetable and nut fat varieties. But here in Canada we are not at present concerned with those forms of margarine. The claim of our manufacturers is based upon the fact that if oleomargarine is banned from Canada all the oleo oil and neutral which now goes into oleomargarine and will if manufacture is permanently permitted be used in still larger quantities, would have to be sold to American manufacturers. That would mean inevitably a reduction in value of the total by-products from Canadian cattle, it would mean, with the same inevitability, that they would have to pay a reduced price to farmers for their cattle and hogs.

Robbing Peter to Pay Paul

Thus the net result of the request made by the dairy section of our farmers would be protection attained at the cost of lower prices for cattle and hogs to neighboring farmers who happened not to be dairy producers. Is not such robbing of Peter to pay Paul illogical and unsound?

The argument that oleomargarine affects the price of butter is equally hollow. The fact of the matter is that the total consumption of oleomargarine throughout Canada in 1920 was 11,770,000 pounds while the production of butter that year was 236,690,000 pounds, a ratio of nearly twenty to one. Yet the "little fellow" is accused of "beating the big fellow up!" This misconception by the opponents of oleomargarine is all the more remarkable when we know that one-third of the butter production was in the Province of Ontario.

Barking Up the Wrong Tree

Are not the dairy interests "barking up the wrong tree?" J. A. Ruddick, Dairy Commissioner, one of the departmental chiefs of the Ministry of Agriculture, quite recently wrote in a farm newspaper in Ontario:

> "The increase in creamery butter between 1915 and 1920 is equivalent to 659,266,307 pounds of milk and the increase in condensed milk from 1910 to 1920 is equal to about 140,000,000 pounds of milk. Unfortunately for us production was also stimulated in other countries, such as New Zealand and Argentina, to say nothing of the United States. For the near future at any rate it is the New Zealand and not the Argentina competition that we in Canada have most reason to be concerned with. Production in New Zealand was greatly stimulated although they received less for butter and cheese than we did. It is a good time for Canadian dairymen to take stock of the situation and to make sure that they are doing everything in their power to meet this competition."

Argument is Unsound

With oleomargarine a competitor only to the extent of 4½ per cent. of production the dairymen are surely in a ludicrous position in attempting to argue that their prices for butter, depending on world-wide conditions are being seriously undermined by oleomargarine. When the House of Commons and the people of the country understand this it will not be long before the dairy interests are told that they are trying to fit the shoe on the wrong foot.

This window is that of the A. and C. store at Van couver. It is not only attractive from the standpoint of a splendid arrangement but it has a dis tinct selling value. While it features cheese, other lines are also shown, and the big factor is th at in each case the price card is prominent.

Backing the Sales Talk With a Sample

Grocer Increases Turnover of a Certain Brand of Cheese by Placing a Dish of Small Samples Just in Front of the Cash Register on the Counter—Clerks Must be Sold First on a Product if They Are to Talk Convincingly to Customers

By Staff Correspondent Canadian Grocer

MONTREAL.—Sales ability and sales ideas are becoming more and more imperative in the grocery business. Even the self-serve system is showing its weakness on this point, and on all sides one sees more sales aggressiveness, better displays and novel ideas for building up sales. The staple lines pretty well take care of themselves but even in these, some grocers have found a means of making bigger sales and increasing consumption of lines which are considered the necessities of life.

Getting Bigger Sales of Cheese

For example, W. J. Brown, proprietor of the grocery store at 888 St. Catherine St. West, Montreal, has increased the sale of a certain brand of cheese by placing a dish of small samples of the cheese just in front of the cash register on the counter. Each little square of cheese is punctured with a tooth pick which bears the name of the brand of cheese and serves as a handle with which to lift the cheese. A card over the dish invites the customer to sample the goods. This, Mr. Brown states, has meant increased sales of this brand of cheese. Not only has the sign and the dish of samples solicited the interest of the customers but it has served as a constant reminder to the clerks that the goods are there to be sold, with the result that nearly every customer that comes into the store is told of the delicious flavor of the cheese.

The enterprising grocer is constantly seeking novel schemes to increase his turnover. In other words he is always ready to hear of the success that has attended the efforts of some fellow merchant's methods of increasing sales. These are the days when grocers as well as other merchants have to reach out after business, and the story of the success in this regard of W. J. Brown, a grocer down in Montreal, as related in this article, will be found worth reading.

Naturally enough the manufacturers are willing to co-operate with the retail grocers in such a scheme for the promotion of sales. Many have stated that they will gladly credit the retailer with the value of the goods for sampling purposes. One local firm has instructed their travellers to pay the grocer for the goods he has thus used provided sufficient proof is submitted that the goods were used for this purpose.

One Line Every Week

Another St. Catherine Street grocer has made it a practice to push the sale of one particular line every week. Recently it was a brand of French canned peas that he was featuring. The window was full of the line and the clerks were well primed with selling arguments. This grocer pointed out that the first person to sell the goods to, is the clerk and they have, as he said, to be well sold, for the clerk has to be able to talk convincingly to the customers about what he is selling. Almost every week a can, a bottle or a dish of some particular brand of food stuff is left open on the counter with a number of little individual cardboard spoons for the use of the prospective buyer. Last week a dish of French peas was left on the counter and each customer was asked to note the soft fresh texture of the small peas. In this way selling became more of an intimate talk between the grocer and his customer than a recital of an age worn attempt at selling, "any canned goods, peas, beans, corn, tomatoes?"

Means Bigger Profits

A Canadian Grocer representative was assured that this method of selling meant unmistakably larger sales. In fact it is not one bit surprising that it did, for everything and everybody about the store seemed obsessed with the

Prize Winners in Window Dressing Contest in Montreal

Montreal, (Special)—During Easter week Gunn's Ltd. held a window dressing contest in Montreal in which 105 retail grocers and butchers of the city and district participated. The conditions of the contest were that the displays were to be of Gunn's products and that the windows should be dressed by the staff of the store competing.

The first prize was awarded to J. N. Duncan, proprietor of the Westminster Provision store, 58 Westminster Ave., Montreal west. The second prize was won by Mrs. T. K. T. Stone who dressed the window in her store at 627 Wellington St., Point St. Charles. The window in P. E. Dery's store at 471 Ontario St. E., dressed by G. A. Beaudoin and G. N. Nadeau, won the third prize and the fourth prize went to the display in the Outremont Provision store 2298 Hutchinson St, dressed by R. Ouimet. The contest was judged on a basis of 25 points for a perfect window in all respects. Five points were given for a window imparting the greatest advertising value, five points for attractiveness, five points for novelty of design; five for the selling value for the grocer and five for the workmanship in the window or the execution of any art work, hand-lettering on price tickets or cards.

the day and not allowed to stand too long. Dishes set in ice can be arranged in the window to display meats, vegetables, fruits and other lines and the very fact that they are set in ice makes them attractive and helps sales. If these displays cannot be made with safety, it is far better for the grocer to put a sign in the window saying that he cannot display cooked meats on account of the hot weather, but that he has some choice selections in the refrigerator. Such an advertisement will draw more business than a window full of poorly protected meats."

Building New Meat Counters

Mr Bessner is planning a new arrangement in his store for this summer and he intends to have refrigerator counters for the display of cooked and fresh meats, vegetables, fish and salads as well as a specially planned window built as a refrigerator and cooled by an ammonia plant which he is installing. In this way he intends to use his windows to the best advantage throughout the summer for the display of perishable goods.

idea of "French peas." It might have been called "Pea Week," as far as that grocery was concerned. The window was well dressed with them. A pyramid of these cans stood on counter while a sign on the wall back of the counter advertised the price on this particular brand. So each week is a special week with this grocery store. Naturally the grocer picks a good line, both in quality and in profit. It is generally a specialty line but he claims that when the week is over the line is no longer a specialty but comes under the regular list by virtue of the repeat orders that come from satisfied customers.

First Vessel to Arrive At Montreal This Season

Montreal.—The first passenger vessel of the year came up the St. Lawrence River on Sunday last and opened the season one week earlier than last year. It was the S. S. Montreal from Italy, carrying passengers and freight. The Canadian Government Merchant Marine freighter Canadian Hunter also arrived from Italy during the week-end. Both these vessels carried large supplies of nuts, dried fruits and fresh fruits from Italy. Freighters and passenger vessels are now on their way from Liverpool and Southampton to Montreal.

Hard to Tell

A lawyer was cross-examining an old German grocer about the position of the doors, windows, etc., in the house in which a certain transaction occurred.

"And now, my good old man," said the lawyer, "will you be good enough to tell the court how the stairs run in the house?"

The German looked dazed and unsettled for a moment. "How do the stairs run?" he queried.

"Yes, how do the stairs run?"

"Vell," continued the witness, after a moment, "Ven I am opp-stairs dey run down and ven I am down stairs dey run opp."

Produce, Provision and Fish Markets

QUEBEC MARKETS

MONTREAL, May 3.—The feature of the produce market is the weakness in butter and cheese. The make of new creamery butter has shown a big increase and prices dropped. The cheese market also eased up in sympathy with butter and a drop of one cent is quoted in the wholesale market. The egg market holds firm and despite the increased production the consumption has kept stocks well cleared up. The local hog market has held up through the week but an easy feeling is now evident with slightly lower prices on fresh killed hogs. The bacon market shows more activity with a better outlook for export. Cooked meats have enjoyed a stimulated movement due to the moving season locally. Maple syrup is in good demand and prices are firm. Margarine is unchanged and lard prices are steady. Brook trout is expected on the market this week and Gaspe salmon by the end of the month. Some fresh spring salmon has arrived from British Columbia.

WEAKNESS IN BUTTER

Montreal.

BUTTER.—During the early part of last week the butter market gained strength but lost it later on account of bigger supplies. Prices have declined 1c per lb. and prospects are that for domestic market quotations will go still lower. Retailers are buying only for immediate requirements due to the weakness of the market. Most of the old stocks of butter have been cleaned up and the new make of creamery is steadily increasing.

CHEESE PRICES REDUCED

Montreal.

CHEESE.—Receipts of cheese locally have shown an increase of 2,851 boxes over the previous week and an easy tendency has developed. The make is steadily increasing and in consequence, the offerings in the country are larger, developing a weak tendency in sympathy with butter. Local wholesale prices are reduced 1c per lb., quotations now run from 18c to 19c.

EGG PRICES FIRM

Montreal.

EGGS.—The egg market stands firm at 32c per doz., supplies are much larger but the bearish factor is offset by the consumptive demand which is particularly large at present owing to the reasonable prices. The egg market is active and although prices show no change there is a firm tendency running throughout.

FIRMER TONE TO SMOKED MEATS

Montreal.

BACON.—The smoked meat market is without any feature of note. Prices are firm and offerings are well cleared up with a fair demand. The hog market, holding firm, has lent a better tone to bacon and has been augmented by some activity in the export market.

MAPLE SYRUP FIRM

Montreal.

MAPLE SYRUP.—A fair amount of business is being done in maple products and the demand is holding up. The call seems to be entirely for small lots which indicates that the consumption is not falling off as quickly as it sometimes does. Supplies are ample to meet all requirements although some of the producers state that the demand is greater than it has been for some years past. 13-lb. tins are quoted from $1.75 to $1.85 per tin while the small tins are sold at $1.15 and $1.25.

MARGARINE UNCHANGED

Montreal.

MARGARINE.—A fair demand continues for margarine with prices unchanged. Although the butter market shows weakness it has not had the corresponding effect on margarine. The demand for this line is limited due principally to the comparatively low prices on butter. Margarine is quoted locally at 21 and 22 cents per lb.

COOKED MEATS MORE ACTIVE

Montreal.

COOKED MEATS.—Owing to the May day moving in Montreal the demand for cooked meats has been particularly good during the past week. Prices are firm but unchanged and the general condition of the market is improved.

FRESH KILLED HOGS EASIER

Montreal

FRESH MEATS.—Owing to a keener demand among the packers for live hogs, to meet an improved market in England, prices on bacon hogs show some strength. The local market displayed weakness and prices dropped 35c per cwt. towards the close of last week but in sympathy with other hog markets it firmed up until the price reached $13.50 for selected lightweights, weighed off cars. Prices on fresh killed hogs have eased off slightly to $19.50 per cwt. The offerings locally are ample to meet all requirements.

ONTARIO MARKETS

TORONTO, May 3.—The market for live hogs showed a shade stronger tendency during the week with prices slightly advanced. Butter has an easier tone while cheese is likewise easy with quotations reduced. Eggs maintain a firm tone under an active demand for consumption and also for storage purposes. Lard and shortening are easier under lower quotations. Cooked, smoked, salt and barrel meats have a steadier tone with quotations unchanged. The fish market is quiet and unchanged. Poultry prices are maintained under a quiet demand.

BUTTER MARKET WEAKENS

Toronto.

BUTTER.—The market weakened at the beginning of the week with prices down one cent per pound. The make of fresh made Ontario butter is steadily increasing, which, with the break in the market at Montreal is claimed to be the reason for the weakness. The best grades of creamery prints are quoted at 38c and 40c at the moment but a further reduction is likely by the end of the week.
